That was the verdict last night of the board's communications director. Mr Michael Eaton, at the end of a week in which, according to board figures, just over 5,000 strikers have crossed NUM picket lines to break their involvment in the 36-week-old conflict.
At the same time it became coown that a senior member of the Cabinet has proposed that working miners who are isolated and being intimidated in strike-bound communities should be resettled for their own protection.

Mr Arthur Scargill, president of the NUM, hotly contested the board's figures and what he called the board's "black propaganda", saying: "The miners' strike remains solid, demon-strating the determination, courage, and wonderful support of NUM members and their families in this crucial fight to save jobs and communities". However, Mr Eaton, director of the coal board's North Yorkshire area, responded in an interview with The Times: "I expect we will get more than half of the industry back by Christmas. They (the NUM) just have to go for a ballot, and by definition you get a positive

But in the wake of last month's Brighton bombing there is an acute security and political concern about the summit.
Mrs Thatcher is scheduled to attend a Community heads of government meeting in Dublin early next month, and security advisers might well have advised that it was better to limit the risks by asking Dr Fitz-Gerald to come to Britain again. Certainly, the security forces

The Prime Minister's protection has never been so stringent, and the uncertainty that has been deliberately spread about the weekend's expected summit is part of the security exercize. The political sensitivity of the summit is also keenly felt

NCB anger over disputed figures

Regional officials of the National Coal Board are incensed by accusations from the National Union of Mineworkers return-to-work figures are being "cooked" and have offered to open attendance books for independent scrutiny to prove they are accurate.

Mr Peter Binns, the public relations officer for the Midlands including Nottingham-shire, Derbyshire, Leicestershire, Warwickshire and Kent, said yesterday: "We feel very resentful about these allegations because there is no way we would be a party to something

He said that Mr Ken Moses, the area director for the north Derbyshire coalfield had made Coal Dispute: NUM Statistics Figures it clear that he would open attendance records to a "person of stature" to examine freely how they were compiled.

The board reported yesterday that 3,444 men had reported for work in north Derbyshire on three shifts in the 24 hours up to midday yesterday - including 146 for the first time. The number of men who returned to work for the first time this week reached a total of 1,275.

The board issues 24-hour figures to match the number of shifts in a day. It insists that its figures for those working in-cludes only members of the NUM doing industrial work and does not include clerical and canteen staff - also memvers of the union - some of vhom are on strike. More than 1,000 clerical staff working in see if the report by Peat, would perish and there would the Midlands are excluded from Bernard Levin, page 8 | daily.

 The National Union of Mineworkers yesterday pub-lished area by area figures for the pit strike for the first time since it began nearly nine months ago. The unions version is that fewer than 50,000 pitmen are at work while the National Coal Board claims that nearly 60,000 men are not on strike.

The NCB and the NUM collect their figures on a different are basis and their definition of those reporting for work also varies. The NUM counts all those now working, including men absent or on sick leave, whereas the NCB confine its statistics to those working in defiance of the NUM strike call.

Government defers MacGregor fees By Our Political Correspondent

The Government has manto side-step potential political embarrassment over cash payments due to Lazard Freres of New York as compensation for the loss of Mr Ian MacGregor's services.
When Mr McGregor was appointed chairman of British

Steel in 1980 it was announced Lazard Freres would be paid initial compensation of £675,000 with two further performance-related payments to be made this year and in The first payment, up to £700,000 was to be based on results of the year up to last April; the second payment, up to £450,000, is to be based on the results of the year up to the end of next March. But Mr Norman Lamont,

Minister of State for Industry, announced in a Commons written reply last night: "The Government and Lazard Freres of New York have agreed to defer any decision on the firt performance payment." It had been decided to make the first and second performance payments together, once the present year's results have been prepared.

BBC drops Animal Magic after 21 years.

Animal Magic, the BBC television gramme presented by Johnny Morris, the well-known broadcaster and television personality, has been dropped.

Mr Morris, who is 68, and whose voice is familiar to millions for his travel and nature programmes, will continue to work for BBC radio, He said yesterday that he had no bitter feelings towards the BBC, and added: "I owe them everything." None the less, he said he found today's recorded prorammes "tedious" com-pared with the live shows he used to present when Animal Magic first appeared 21 years

By Anthony Bevins Political Correspondent

Mr Cranley Onslow, the new leader of the Tory back bench 1922 Committee, yesterday began as he intends to continue: with a low profile. It was one of the issues of campaign against Mr Edward du Cann, who was chairman of the 1922 Committee for 12 years, that he appeared far too often in print and on television. Mr Onslow, aged 58, the MP for Woking, was presumably elected because his friends argued that he would pass on hack benchers' views to the Prime Minister without fear or favour, but also without the attendant publicity which Mr du Cann attracted.

His campaign has also sug-gested another weakness which

Sales of modern art end on a quiet note

By Huon Mallalieu

The final sessions of the Sotheby series of sales of modern paintings and drawings in New York ended on a quiet note on Thursday, by comparison with what had gone before. The totals for the two sessions were $4,106,300 or £3,214,324 with 16 per cent bought in, and $2,553,430 or £1,998,771 with 25 per cent failing to sell.

There was considerable buying by Japanese dealers, as well as Americans and private collectors, and even a fairly undistinguished and late Renoir portrait of Claude Renoir at the age of five sold for $231,000 or £180,824, to an American collector, against an estimate of from $120,000 to $150,000.

The most expensive of the drawings was an angular pencil study of a man's head by Picasso, which dated from 1912 and sold to a European collector at $165,000 or £129,158.

HELP SAVE LIV

AFRICA FAMINE PETITION

We, the undersigned, are shocked by the human suffering caused by famine in Ethiopia and other African countries. The British Government has responded to public concern by providing some short term assistance. But, given the immensity of the crisis, these measures are inadequate and much greater efforts are vital. Concerted action can and must be taken to prevent famines in the future. We call on the Government to: provide appropriate emergency relief to Ethiopia and other affected areas for at least 12 months — until their next harvest is secured. 2 urge other Governments, the EEC and UN agencies to make a similar commitment. 3 ensure that aid reaches hungry people in response to human need regardless of political factors. 4 increase the quantity and quality of long term development aid to avert future famines in Ethiopia and elsewhere.

Scientists name vital species close to extinction

From Richard Wigg Madrid

Twelve of the most threatened animals and plants regarded as vital to save from extinction, have been named by an internatonal group of scien-tists. It has called on governments to give pregent attention to its two lists of species and take appropriate measures with expert international assistance. The lists, which highlight the link between the species and support systems upon which man depends, were published at the end of the Madrid meeting of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature.

£1,300m gas chain opened By Ronald Faux

The £528m gas processing plant at Mossmorran in Fife, Scotland, the last link in an integrated gas-gathering chain that has cost £1,300m, was formally opened yesterday by Mr George Younger, Secretary of State for Scotland. The plant is operated by Shell, and is part of system that joins oilfields north-east of Shetland with the processing plant and an exporting terminal on the north shore of the Forth 400 miles away.

Partners in the project are Shell and Esso, who have provided half the funding. In addition, Esso Chemicals will be responsible for an ethylene plant at Mossmorran which is piant at Mossinorian which is to be commissioned next year to handle some of the petro-chemical feedstock produced An estimated 465 million barrels of natural gas liquids lie along with the 1,736 million barrels of recoverable oil in the Shelland fields and the project is designed to extract the last drop of benefit from the group of 12 production platforms in the east Shetland basin.

The oil runs by pipeline to the Sullom Voe terminal in Shetland. To handle the gas, the Snettand. 10 handle the gas, the Far North Liquids and Associated Gas System (FLAGS) was set up to build the longest underwater pipeline in the British sector of the North Sea.

PARLIAMENT November 16 1984

Share sale will make BT more commercially aware

COMMONS

Some 3,012 million ordinary shares in British Telecom are to be offered for sale at a price of 130p per share. Mr Geoffrey Patrie, Minister of State for Industry and Information Technology, announced in a statement to the Commons. The issue had, he said, been fully underwritten.

underwritten.

The announcement was immediately attacked by Labour MPs and their Spokesman. Mr Alan Williams, considered the price was wrong. It would mean that the government was selling control of nearly £16,000m of public assets for them. £4,000m A serious than £4,000m A less than £4,000m. A private monopoly was being created answerable to no one but its

Mr Pattie contended the sale would make BT even more commercially aware that it had been. In future it would have to satisfy both customers and shareholders. Wherever possible, applications from small investors would be given

Mr Pattie said: Discussions are taking place with a group of financial institutions and I am hopeful that within the next two hopeful that within the next two hours the shares being offered in the UK will have been fully applied for. Subject to the successful outcome of these discussions the institutions will retain just over half of these shares and the remainder will be made available for public offer next Prospectuses will be published on Tuesday. November 20 and the last date for applications will be 10am on Wednesday November 28. on Wednesday November 28.

Of the shares on offer 415 million which is just under 14 per cent have been provisionally allocated for issues to be made in New York. Tokyo and Toronto and these are being underwritten by the Bank of England.

Mr Alan Williams, an Opposition spokesman on trade and industry, said it was an incredible day, a day when a Government which pretended to be concerned about the future of high technology in this country had amounted the pretended to be a specific to the concerned about the future of high technology in this country had amounted the price of the concerned about the future of high technology in this country had amounted the price of the concerned about the country had a price of the concerned about the country had a price of the concerned about the country that the country had been also as the country that the country, had announced the price at which it intended to hand over to the whims of short-term profit maximisation the very industry which would be at the centre of the

In addition to the price error, the combined cost of British Telecom advertising this year, of the Government's advertising in relation to the launch and the commissions to be paid to the underwriters and banks will be at least £100m and probably nearer £150m, all to the Government's friends in the City.

Behind the Government's boast that it intends to extend share ownership, they are taking this asset which will earn £1,300m profit this year for the 55 million people of Britain who own it at present, in order to sell it at a knock-down price

It is clear before the sale that the Government's guarantees are absolutely meaningless. Mr Pattic has said 415 million shares have been allocated for sale overseas. Another three per cent. 90 million shares, are going to be bid for in this country out of the British tranche by an overseas consortium.
As there are no controls over any such bids by other consortia, what action did the Government intend to take to stop this erosion of control by sale overseas? Mr Pattie: This announcement will workers could apply for 54 free shares worth just over £70 and would also receive two free shares for every one they bought, up to a maximum of 154 shares. This was an important start.

Mr Alan Williams said Mr Pattie had ignored his important question about an overseas consortium which intended to buy from within the United Kingdom tranche. This consortium intended to buy a significant quantity, nearly 100m shares, if it could get its hands on them.

Is Mr Pattie (he asked) aware of action? Or can overseas buyers indiscriminately apply within the United Kingdom tranche in United Kingdom tranche in addition to the 415 million shares being allocated for sale overseas?

Mr Pattie said he was not aware of the consortium. But he could not comment in public at this stage. about how share prices might move or who might want to buy them. The 10 per cent limit on applications would be closely scrutinized.

Answering a further question on purchasing of equipment from abroad, Mr Pattle said the BT chairman would obviously feel that he wanted the company to operate way possible. He had talked to the way possible. He had talked to the chairman, Sir George Jefferson, and knew from those discussions that he did all he could to support the British equipment industry and was prepared to lean as heavily as he could in that direction.

But he did not want the chairman to be subject to the clammy hand of Government direction to force acquisitions from British companies where the equipment might not be the mest up to date. And telling British industry that it could rely for ever and a day on BT orders would not help them to be more effective or competitive in world markets.

Social Democrat quotes 'Times' editorial as Kohl faces Flick fury

In a stormy debate lasting five hours. Herr Hans-Jochen Vogel, the West German Social Democratic parliamentary leader, called for a full clearing-up of the Flick scandal and quoted at length from a leading article in The Times to support his criticism of Chancellor Helmut Kohl's handling of the affair.

The debate, which saw angry accusations hurled by leading West German politicians at each other and dwelt on the "crisis of confidence" scandal has caused, did not come to any conclusion on what should be done to end the affair or regain public trust.

Herr Vogel said nothing should be covered up if public loss of confidence in Bonn's politicians was to be halted. Parliamentary democracy would be affected if any doubis were to remain on who really had the final word in Bonn. Against noisy interruptions, Herr Vogel sharply criticized what he called the consistent ttempts by the Chancellor and the Government to play down the scandal. From Diana Geddes Paris

Amid a continuing storm here over contradictory claims concerning the withdrawal of Libyan troops from Chad, President Mitterrand admitted yesterday he was fully aware that several hundred Libyan soldiers were still there. This had been one of the main reasons for meeting Colonel Gaddafi, the Libyan leader, on Thursday.

In a joint statement last Saturday, the French and Libyan governments declared that the withdrawal of their forces had been completed in accordance with the terms of the pact signed by the two countries on September 17.

M Claude Cheysson, the French Foreign Minister, said he was certain the Libyans had gone, while M Jean Michel Baylet, the junior Minister for Foreign Affairs, still felt able to assure the United Nations in New York as late as Wednesday that Libyan troops had withdrawn completely.

The Americans were already claiming that they had proof, based on photographs from observation satellites, that most of the estimated 3,500 Libyan troops and their equipment were still in Chad. It was further claimed that the French shared

Denial of torture by Spain

From Richard Wigg Madrid

Improved regulations ensure the physical safety of those detained in Spain's jails are to be introduced shortly, according to Senor José Barrionuevo, the Interior Minister. Speaking in the Senate on Thursday, he denied that systematic torture by the police or the paramilitary Civil Guard still went on. But he conceded there might be "exceptionally, illegal conduct by some police functionaries". Señor Barrionuevo criticized the recent report by Amnesty International on Spain, complaining that it was slanted and

He began by asking what is the relationship between brain and mind. Mind, he says, is what we experience when brain works - brains cause minds, which may all sound blazingly obvious, but is not in fact a well accepted point of view. have no grasp of meaning.
It has been quite an active week for brain studies. Yesterday saw the start of a new series, The Mind in Focus (Radio 4; producer, Daniel Snowman), which reports on current thinking in psychology. In the first programme, on creativity, Peter Evans conduc-ted a lightning investigation followed by an even briefer discussion between Edward de Bono, Liam Hudson and Anthony Storr, three very familiar contributors on matters psychological who none of them gave the impression that current thinking is any different from the thoughts of 10 years ago.

If the first mark of a master comedian is the power to annexe material hitherto viewed as no laughing matter, then Dario Fo clearly qualifies as the greatest comic artist since Chaplin. His line of Marxist farce acknowledges no taboos in the face of atrocity and disaster: and having slain his British customers with studies of police corruption and the collapsing economy, he now moves on to terrorism and torture.

Trumpets and Raspberries (briefly seen at Riverside in January) concerns the kidnapping of the Fiat boss, Gianni Agnelli, and had its Milan premiere in 1981 in the wake of the assassination of Aldo Moro As, even for Fo, there was no satirizing a kidnap victim, he devised an alternative fate for Agnelli: mutilated in a car crash and transformed into the double of the communist shopsteward (Berardi) who rescued him from the blazing wreck. What develops is a farce of on his physical disability.

Roman model, with the double's wife claiming Agnelli as her runaway husband, and the police suspecting him of having kidnapped himself.

As usual with this author, private and public comedy go hand in hand: exposing the weakness of shop-floor communists when confronting their enraged womenfolk, and bringing the plot home to roost from "Carry On" casualty ward to the greater lunacies of the Berardi living room, with the abandoned Rosa ministering to both doubles.

As in Accidental Death of an Anarchist, the central figure is a trickster who shows up the criminal idiocy of the powers of law and order. However, the snag in this scheme is that the trickster is Agnelli himself, and, for once, Fo has not got him properly into focus. On one hand, the play satirizes him as a capitalist buffoon. But the comic scheme does not allow this to develop; instead, Agnelli masterminds a terrorist hoax in order to prove his own supreme political importance, and comedy has to make do with jokes

Throughout the play, these carry slapstick to a macabre extreme, beginning with medical gags involving the injection of giant syringes into the wrong bottoms, and reaching their zenith with a gruesome feeding gleefully seize as an ingenious new instrument of torture. What is lacking from Roger Smith's production is a sense of the cruel reality behind the gags. This is very much an entertainment for people who know nothing about Italian justice and care less. Griff Rhys Jones makes a beaming first entry to explain Agnelli's identity in words of one syllable; and thereafter farcical business takes over to the exclusion of any line of thought. On those terms, he doubles with blissfully funny expertise between the two identical class enemies; sup-ported in both roles by a demoniacally possessive Gwen Taylor.

"Don't you ever forget me or you will be in trouble", said Ferrucio Berolo, the Venetian dancing master to his child students in BBC2's Italians last night. They had just had a successful performance to a full house and endorsed their masters's eminence among his competitors.

Signor Berolo's exhortation seemed unnecessary. No one could ever forget him. Had the series begun with this one, produced by Edward Mirzoeff, we might almost have dis-pensed with the others. Signor Berolo seemed to encompass all ltaly, gesticulating, cooking, drinking, eating and masticating life with relish. "Excitable and temperamental", his English wife Jackie described him, also unnecessarily.

Signor Berolo, a Veneuan by adoption but "deeply, profoundly in love with this town", was a ballet dancer for 20 years, "anything but brilliant, just a decent dancer", he said modestly. But when it came to character parts, they came to him. One could imagine the inevitability.

We followed him exploding round Venice, railing against the bureaucracy delaying his new school there, lambasting his pupils, shopping with an clan that transformed the mundane into theatre. It followed that his wife, also a former ballet dancer, seemed a very patient woman.

The photography was excellent and Venice showed beautifully. It would surely be different without Signor Berolo. By contrast Francis Bacon, whose 75th birthday BBC2's Arena marked, was definitely low-key. He was interviewed in his Chelsea studio by his friend, the art critic David Sylvester who, possibly because of his long acquaintance, was able to acclaim profundities that I found elusive.

It was the kind of interview which at times made one feel an intruder and at others made one want to intrude and demand an explanation. One senses that elusiveness is part of Mr Bacon. He was indifferent, he said, to what people thought about his work and had never even thought it would sell. Art was about trying to making some-thing out of the chaos of existence and he seemed admirably satisfied with his own

Concerts

Philharmonia/ Tilson Thomas Festival Hall

If, as Edith Wharton once ruefully remarked, the American landscape has no foreground and the American mind no background, where exactly does that leave American music? Michael Tilson Thomas, champion of Ives, Ruggles and Reich, gave us a chance to ponder the matter further on Thursday night in a programme of Copland, Barber, Gershwin and expatriate Bartok. Each work was a concerto of sorts. Or was it? The shifting concepts of space and of the ndividual lie not far from the heart of the matter, and those, precisely, were what we heard played out during the course of

Just before Bartók's American-composed "Concerto for Orchestra", came a rarity: George Gershwin's "Second Rhapsody for Orchestra with Solo Piano". The work's troubled history of missing and destroyed orchestral parts, of bastardized and reorchestrated editions, has prohibited any performance of its original version for more than 30 years. We have Tilson Thomas and Ira Gershwin to thank for the new set of parts, lovingly made from Gershwin's original manuscript, and the Philharmonia to praise for the exhilarating recreation of them.

It is a heady work, loud with evocation, is a ticker-tape hero. Things happen faster and with a greater fury than in the "Rhapsody in Blue", only in a cadenza-like medley of little Porgy-and-Bess-like fragments does reflection come, in the shape of a Waller or Basic whimsy, and suspended with delicate grace in Tilson Thomas's fingers. Otherwise the piano is timpani and prompt, busker and basker in the Californian sun of Gershwin's confident maturity.

David Pountney's Victorian nursery production of Rusalka has returned to the English National Opera after a gap of 18 months, during which other productions by him have only confirmed the strong dramatic possibilities of his present creamery phase. Listening to the Budapest Wind Ensemble, led by the young clarinettist Kalman Berkes, is a tonic, Even in a "serious" programme (ie. without the Joplin and other frolics in which they excel) their enjoy-ment in music-making is infectious. Risking spanking tempi for the faster movements of Krommer's F major Partita, Op 57, they maintained complete control, and made its slow movement a true song without words.

At their St John's debut they also won the day for a Magyarinspired, albeit youthfully eclectic. Ending with Mozart's E flat Serenade, K375, they only once (in the course of the finale) seemed strained by their own spirited launching speed.

For the rest they found the poise and polish as well as the panache for this "rather carefully written" (to quote the composer) work.

Taking a powder

Startling innovations in the art of spectator participation have been developed in Togo, but the result is likely to be an official protest by the Nigerian Football Association. The match that started the trouble was an African Champions' Cup semifinal between Ibadan Shooting Stars of Nigeria, and Semassi Sokoda of Togo. A former Nigerian military state governor claims he was manhandled by Togolese security guards, and supporters say they were prevented from using the gongs and drums with which they express their team affection. Worst of all, the Nigerian players complained that they were bombarded by Togolese supporters with itching powder which affected them for days afterwards. Despite their agonies, the fixture itself was not scratched. Shooting Stars won 6-3 on aggregate.

The Metropolitan Police football team are not famous for their exploits in the FA Cup. But Vic Rouse, their manager is. He played a star part in a famous third round match in 1962, when he kept goal for fourth division Crystal Palace against first division Aston Villa. In the last minute they were 3-3, then Rouse dropped a cross from Burrows, and the ball rolled gently into the net. The final whistle blew almost at once. Rouse recalled: Ronnie Allen picked up the ball and booted it clean over the stand". Rouse has managed the policemen for 11 years. Nor did both the new service and the old leap at once (as the doomsayers had insisted they would) into a fierce struggle to see which could more rapidly and completely debauch the nation. What happened was first that the quality of BBC programmes improved rapidly and greatly under the lash of competition, and second (more slowly) there was a polarization of television on both sides; the programmes designed to appeal to a mass audience improved in technical accomplishment but deteriorated in content, while those aimed at a more demanding minority improved in

Next came BBC 2; that gave the BBC freedom to chase ratings on BBC 1, which it has been doing assiduously (while denying it) ever since, though lately with little success, and at the same time to put on programmes which would never have been screened on BBC 1 but which have included a vast number of television landmarks for quality. When Channel 4 arrived to equalize the score, it soon, after a fairly chaotic start (but BBC 2 had one of those), began to challenge BBC 2 more frequently and consistently than ITV's main channel had ever been able to do: I have no doubt that as the battle between the two "minority" channels continues, it will improve both.

With this history in mind, the BBC is trebly unwise to light the blue touch-paper and then sit on the rocket. First, it is going to be too easy, as the battle starts in earnest, for the Corporation's opponents to remind the country of the ridiculous excesses of which the BBC and its supporters were guilty first time round. Second, anyone skilled in controversy knows that when faced with a peremptory challenge the correct response is not to start the Third World War, but to say "Well, well, what an interesting suggestion - let's have a good look at it, shall we?" Third, the BBC shows itself to be almost entirely unaware of the dislike many of its viewers feel for it. Nothing I have seen in the BBC's defence so far (it is early yet, of course) convinces me that it is right to reject out of hand the advertising proposal, and much of the defence seems to me to provide only support for the other side; some of what the Corporation is saying, indeed, suggests that the BBC believes that its programmes will inevitably becorrupted if it has to include advertising, which will certainly be used by the other side to say that if those in charge of the BBC have no confidence in their ability to keep their standards high, who are they to talk about standards anyway?

I am myself by no means yet convinced of the case for the BBC to take advertising. But I am quite sure that the BBC has not yet convincingly made out the case against it.

I do not agree with those who, eager to do down the BBC for largely political reasons, foolishly deny its quality altogether. Like any regular BBC television and radio broadcaster, I know very well how those three syllables fling open doors all over the world and produce unasked a warm assurance that the BBC is still recognized as the world's best. I also believe that if you take the BBC as a whole - radio as well as television, local radio as well as national, overseas broadcasts as well as domestic - it is still the world's best, and the fact that this or that programme, indeed this or that season of programmes, is lousy does not disprove the contention, any more than the fact that the Corporation is swollen with bureaucratic dropsy and the sub-division of the BBC called BBC Enterprises is the most ludicrously misnamed entity since the invention of the Bombay Duck demonstrates that advertising is essential to cure its ills. If the BBC will take advice from one who admires it and wishes it well, let its leaders fall silent on the subject of advertising and spend the period of silence (a long one, for preference) in preparing a calm, honest and flexible case against it. based on something more impressive than an assumption of superior-ity and a strident claim that thing which has never been done before should in no circumstances be done now. Last week the TUC, with certain, eminent churchmen, launched a new Miners' hardship fund". Quite apart from asking which miners are suffering more hardship, workers and wanting-to-workers or strikers, many will view this fund as a cynical attempt by the TUC to avoid any but the most meagre fraternal responsibilities to Scargill as it sees that his war is lost.

But what of the churchmen. Monsignor Warlock, the Right Rev David Shepherd and Dr Williams? Why are they risking their ecumenical necks? They are respresentatives of that great British spiritual and political movement which can best be called the Will to Lose - a kind of antithesis to Nietzsche's Will 10

Subscribers to Will to Lose are to be found throughout British society. They have this in common: they regard conflict as the greatest of all evils. And so when conflict threatens, they are always ready to cede the outer reaches of their spiritual and temporal estates to avoid it. If this does not work, they go to extraordinary lengths, especially if they are clerics. Monsignor Bruce Kent is organizing a military movement which, if surrender successful, could lead to an eventual takeover of this country by a regime that would certainly not permit him to practice his chosen religion. The Bishop of Durham has publicly insulted the chairman of the NCB and Canon Boulton has claimed that the police are being used to assert the board's right to manage.

Even after a conflict is over, supporters of the Will to Lose keep working. They are spearheading the attack on the Government over the sinking of the Belgrano. Victory is the one condition they cannot abide, not just because it exposes their own philosophy. It imposes an intolerable responsibility on the victor, one they are unready to accept.

The miners' strike may come to be seen as the moment when Britain's postwar moral exhaustion ended, when those in a position to influence events who subscribe to the Will to Lose were at last outnumbered by those with a more robust view of affairs. Although most members of the Cabinet are reported to be absolutely sound at least on this issue, from time to time certain senior ministers have arranged for inspired articles to appear in newspapers pointing out that many members of the Government, mindful of the cost to the country of the strike, mindful of the cost in suffering to the communities. are most anxious for a settlement. One minister recently declared on television, at a sensitive moment, during the negotiations, that there could be no winners and no losers in the dispute, a very typical Will to Reasonable arguments? On the surface, perhaps. Unerly unreasonable the moment they are examined in any detail. First, there is not a shred of evidence in his public or private behaviour, nor in the negotiating positions that he has adopted throughout the dispute to demonstrate that Scargill wants or is temperamentally capable of accepting a negotiated settlement. He willhappily negotiate a victory, but that is a very different matter.

Second, there is no chance of managing the industry after the strike unless management is seen to have won - clearly. Indeed, in the same way that the Allies found magnanimity for the vanquished after the war, the only way healing is likely to come to the mining communities after so much bitterness for so long is if one side clearly wins: a moment when the services of churchmen could have real value.

It is no accident that miners are beginning to return to work in greater mumbers now that it is clear that the NCB has no more to offer and further negotiations are therefore pointless. One of Scarpill's greatest factical victories, ably aided and abetted by the Will to Lose faction within the NCB, has been his skill at keeping negotiations going when there has been no chance of a settlement, and so encouraging his men from going back to work.

The coal industry has been run for the benefit of the employees, from miner to manager, for as long as it has been nationalized. Had there. been no strike, management attitudes might slowly have been transformed, but most individuals have taken their stand on conventional ground, and have been quite unwilling to listen to new ideas. This is the root of many of the NCB's more public problems.

Now that negotiations have terminated, it looks increasingly as though the miners themselves will end the strike. More and more of them are realizing how their loyalty to their union has been abused. Others are returning to work out of financial desperation. An end to the strike on the terms currently on offer to the NUM will be a defeat for the Will to Lose, despite the concessions. Even so, it is unlikely, unless the Government seizes this opportunity to divide the industry into autonomous regional concerns ready to be privatized when profitable, that it will be run in the future in any way save at the cost of the shareholder, in this case the Many senior staff have wanted to taxpayer, for the benefit of em-quickly in forming a new policy affecting the entire nation. But that is what seems to be happening over the DHSS report last July by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (Coma) concerning diet and heart disease. The report, inter alia, calls for accurate labelling of food. Though medical truths cannot be established by majority vote, there is now overwhelming support for the belief that the major cause of heart disease is eating too much fat, particularly saturated fat, compounded by an excess of sugar leading to avoidable obesity. The United Kingdom holds the world record in deaths from heart diseases

– at least 180,000 a year between the ages of 15 and 74 It is far the largest single cause of death, including cancer. Treating the victims, of whom obviously not all die immediately, is a major expense to the NHS, and the loss in earnings to the sufferers is huge.

Millions gradually commit suicide by eating large quantities of chips. potato crisps, butter, sausages, made-up foods from shops and take-aways. Most school meals could have been designed by a mad mass

The public are dimly aware that something is wrong, hence the growing demand for margarine and cooking oils high in polyunsaturated fat. Despite the obscurantism of the dairy trade, consumer demand is forcing greater supplies of skimmed milk, of which the percentage of energy supplied by fat is approximately one twentieth that in full milk. It would be better if the EEC butter and cheese mountains were destroyed than eaten. The same applies to the encouragement to

The difficulty for the housewife is to know what is in the food she is buying. There is a rough kind of labelling which is almost useless. Ingredients are listed without specifying the percentage of each. To be told that a sausage contains 65 per cent pork is meaningless unless you know how much saturated fat is in the pork. In fact the percentage of energy in the average fried pork sausage provided by fat is about 69 per cent. The Come report assumes that the percentage of energy from fat in the food we eat is 42 per cent. That is why so many of us die of heart

The Government, realizing that something must be done urgently intends to announce proposals on thusiastic assent of those seembling in the Conway Hall day.

David Nicholson-Lord labelling in spring. To this end it is consulting the food industry but is not consulting consumer associations or, so far as I am aware, independent medical experts or such Prevention Group. The consumer associations are merely being asked to give their views on the public's likely understanding of content descriptions on the labels. They are not being asked what the requirements for the labelling should be.

That appears to be left to discussion between the Ministry of Agriculture and the food industry. What manufacturer of function meat would meekly agree to place at the top of the description of contents that the energy of the ghastly product he is selling is 77 per cent fat? Will sellers of double cream eagerly leap to warn us that 99 per cent of its energy comes from fat of which 61 per cent is highly dangerous saturated animal fat? Will take-away food sellers be anxious to inform their customers that 77 per cent of the energy in a sausage roll is derived from fat? Once the public know what is really in the food they buy, and the risks they run in cating there will be a revolution in the food industry.

The danger in the Government's hasty approach is that accurate and comprehensive labelling may give way to the usual British compromise and fudge. Consultations with wider interests and a great deal more pressure will be needed before a nuinely helpful label is devised and accepted by the food industry.

H is not sufficient to give only the ingredients and their weights. What the consumer needs to know is the percentage of energy being provided by each ingredient. For example, a desirable label would say "Percentage of energy supplied by the following items is as follows: Fat: 19. Saturated Fat: 3. Sugars: 22.6. Salt (a menace to those with high blood pressure): High, Fibre: High," It is not even sufficient to say that the 66 per cent of the energy in a savoury rissole is fat without specifying which kinds of fat.

All governments for years have been responsible for increasing deaths and illness from heart diseases by deliberately encouraging farmers to produce and sell products of far more danger than cigarettes if 100 much is consumed of them. All governments have long connived at the damage to health caused to children by eating meals at school and from take-away food heavily laden with saturated fats. Surely it would be wise to wait just a little longer to make sure that we get the right information on the labels of all foods sold and which can be readily understood by the shopper. If we don't get the labels right first time it will be years before any government can be persuaded to enact fresh legislation requiring new and better lying struggle. Some of this week's events indicate a basic shift in relative strengths while others are more superficial. The key factor is that more than 4,000 miners have returned to work, making a total of 7,000 over the last two weeks. That return does not just reflect the attraction of picking up the Coal Board's Christmas bonuses, the deadline for which has now been extended from next Monday until the end of the week. It also reflects the fact that the Coal Board is at last standing firm on a line agreed with Nacods, which has become in essence a take-itor-leave-it package for the NUM. The ingredients of that package seem to be fair to most trade unionists, many elements of Labour opinion and the voters at large (though in the opinion of this newspaper it is fair to the point of profligacy).

The underlying position there-fore is that the Coal Board, and behind it the Government, now have the initiative. Mr Scargill has lost both the argument and the initiative. He could only restore the initiative by reversing both the amount of miners in work and the amount of coal produced and delivered to power stations. It is clear that he is not able to achieve the former within the coal industry so he has fallen back on other tactics, both physical and psychological.

His first preference, as always, is coercion. He may be unable to reverse the movement back to work but he is certainly trying to contain it by brutal and organized attempts to intimidate, fight and bully miners to stay away from work. The efforts are concentrated in the Yorkshire heartland, and are clearly organized officially, according to reports from within the coalfield. The violence has not been successful since hundreds of miners have returned to work. But given the terrible accounts of to thwart the Libyan invasion of error of his ways by agreeing to a simultaneous withdrawal of French forces and Libyan "supunderstood to be a euphemism for Libyan troops. Now, however, M Mitterrand is in danger of looking extremely foolish. The deadline for withdrawal has arrived; the French forces have duly withdrawn; France has joined Libya in declaring that withdrawal of both countries' forces is complete; the French foreign minister has pronounced himself "certain" that the Libyans have gone; and a junior minister has repeated that assurance to the UN General Assembly. Yet M Mitterrand himself now says his government knew all along that the Libvan withdrawal was not complete, and that, at the very time when France and Libya were solemnly declaring that it was complete, "it was noticed on the ground that there was either a slowing-down of the withdrawal or a reinforcement of the Libyan presence". Observers of Colonel Gaddafi have known for a long time that it is unwise to take his statements or undertakings on trust. One assumed that the French government also knew this, and

The coal strike has lasted 36 those who have braved the weeks. Some of those weeks have criminal activities of their fellow been packed with activity and miners by going in to work, some have passed with little or think how many more hundreds no evident change in the under- or thousands would have returned to work if the pickets had not been there, or at least not mustered in the evil formations that we have seen on our television screens.

The second tactic is to search for any device to persuade miners contemplating a return to work that it would be unwise to do so in case a settlement is just round the corner. Since the Trades Union Congress in September Mr Scargill has exploited a series of fruitless negotiations with the coal board to achieve such an effect on the drift back to work. Now that the coal board has quite rightly nothing more to negotiate, the NUM can only hope to exercise lateral pressure, politically through the Labour Party and physically through any coercive secondary action which other trade unions can be persuaded to adopt by interrupting the movement of coal or the supply of electricity.

Neither of those devices now looks very promising. The Labour Party is increasingly unhappy at the combination of violence and the intransigence of the NUM leadership. Within the trade union movement it is not just Mr John Lyons who believes that there must be a profound revision of the current basis of TUC support for the

So where else does Mr Scargill go? Who in the middle of the summer would have guessed that by November Mr Scargill would be reduced to calling in the bishops for moral and the Soviet and Libyan governments for material support? The bishops should beware. As churchmen they must have a natural inclination to attribute the best motives to anyone who asks for help. However, perhaps before they do so with Mr Scargill they should consider his record.

He has made no secret either of his objectives ("I believe that the only way you are going to get

Now, after M Mitterrand's claim that he really knew what was happening all along, one has to wonder whether French government statements are taken seriously even by those who put them out.

A secondary point is that it does not look all that dignified for M Mitterrand to scurry off to meet Colonel Gaddafi in Crete if he already knew that the Colonel had defaulted on his obligations. But the trip will have been worthwhile if it enabled M Mitterrand to get across to the Colonel that he is not bluffing. and that if the remaining Libyan troops are not immediately withdrawn the French troops really will come back.

It is of course legitimate to ask what they would go back for, also what France expected or expects to happen after the withdrawal; and finally, perhaps, why French soldiers should be expected to fight for this particularly remote and unrewarding area of the African continent.

A man in whose life the pursuit of politics ranked equally with a countryman's pursuits, he was utterly trusted by both Prime Minister and backbenchers. That is the kind of relationship that needs to be recreated. In the rest of this parliament, when the threat of Scargillism has been beaten back, and the Government is more free to concentrate on the future it will have much listening to do, not least as the problems of unemployment and long-term government spending commitments come to the fore. The backbenchers are its best means of communications with the constituencies and the Prime Minister must listen to them. In this process the job of the chairman of the 1922 Committee is to advise and warn rather than to use his office as a personal platform. That is how Mr Cranley Onslow should use it.

From Mr John D. Taylor, MP for Strangford (Official Unionist) and MEP for Northern Ireland (Official Ulster Unionist)

Sir, Most British people oppose a federal Europe and it is for that reason that the majority of the United Kingdom members of the European Democratic Group did not vote in favour of Signor Spinelli's draft treaty on European union in Strasbourg on February 14. Hugh Dykes's suggestion (November 8) that we in the EDG should join the Christian Democrat Group in Strasbourg falls for three Firstly they do not want us because we would be the largest national block within their group. Secondly - the main reason - the CDs are committed to European federalism, which is rejected by the British Conservative and Unionist Party.

Thirdly we hesitate to be associated with those CDs, such as some of the Dutch, who act and vote in a manner close to the left; CDs, and not only the Southern Irish MEPs, who are unfriendly towards the United Kingdom; and CDs, such as the Italians, who bave a sectarian

The Community should not be a movement towards an integrated Europe - it is a means of improving co-operation between European nations and the creation of a large European free trade area. Even in this limited role it has lost the confidence of many who previously supported EEC membership.
The main reason for this has been the failure of its decision-making procedures. The complexity of relations between the Commission, Council of Ministers, and European Parliament must be tackled. It is the European Parliament which may have to suffer if this confusion is to be overcome: Political irresponsibility abounds within this institution so long as it has powers to decide expenditure but no responsibility to raise income.

There now seems little alternative to the removal of budgetary powers from the European Parliament. A simplification, such as this, which would restrict the budgetary procedure to the Commission and the Council of Ministers, would make greater sense to the electorate.

Secondly the Parliament has become detached from the "grass roots" and from the political direction within national Parliaments. Hence the reality that some British MEPs have been elected with the support of less than 10 per cent of their electorate and the obvious tension between Strasbourg and Westminster.

This problem could possibly be overcome if the European Parliament were once again composed of nominated MPs from Westminster rather than directly elected MEPs. In this way the work of the European Parliament would probably become more closely identifiable with the people and political life of the 10 member nations. Yours truly. JOHN D. TAYLOR.

Money matters

From Professor Brian Griffiths Sir, For many Christians, but particularly those of the Anglican Communion, it comes as something of a relief that this week the Bishop of Durham's doubts have been directed away from the fundamentals of our faith, such as the resurrection and the virgin birth, and towards such temporal matters às monetarism.

It is still, however, a source of regret that montarism should have become a general term of abuse, such as fascism. Monetarism is simply the proposition that a change in the stock of money will lead, after a time, to a change in the level of money income. As such, it has nothing to do with the level of government spending, the miners strike or even the personality of the Prime Minister. Yours faithfully, BRIAN GRIFFITHS, Dean,

Oldham West (Labour) Sir. The background to Mr Moonman's ridiculous allegations of "Stalinist tactics" (feature, November 13) regarding my survey of health authority membership was, not surprisingly, unstated.

It springs from his use of his position as chairman of Islington District Health Authority to promote privatisation after authority had earlier rejected it.

That led to his being disowned by his own health authority members, who asked him to resign his chairmanship. In addition Islington North and South Constituency Labour Parties unanimously both passed resolutions condemning his actions.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sir, In your leading article of November 12 you raise contentious issues about overseas aid and cloud the debate by confusing disaster relief and development aid.

If we distinguish the two and recognise the different policy constraints which surround them. perhaps we can avoid the loss of public confidence in the voluntary aid agencies which could be the effect of your writing.

Disasters on the Ethiopian scale not occur just because of inefficient governments. They have many roots. History, social structure, climate, crop selection, com-munications, all may be causes. When the disaster happens, then those who live in safety and in plenty have no option, if they are to retain any self-respect and any human sympathy, but to co-operate and to give all they can.

Our present dismay is that the Governments of the West had to be moved by public opinion before they reacted with any sense of urgency at all. We need more long-sighted and determined international work in this area.

But the question of development aid is more complex because the objectives are harder to agree, and the equation has many factors. Many of us are committed to helping the poorest countries to overcome the great weight of poverty which traps their people. We know this cannot be done by hand-outs of food. So we move into the provision of seeds and tractors, dams and wells.

Then we find that social and economic patterns may prevent any shift in the burdens people carry. So human rights and human freedom become elements in the long-term

To give unsupervised aid to oppressive regimes of the left or the right is not a way of helping the poor. The voluntary aid agencies do not do that, and their record of genting aid to where it is most creative will stand any scrutiny. Yours faithfully,

From Lord Olivier and others Sir. We wish to protest most vigorously against the Arts Council's reported decision to emasculate the work of the Royal Exchange Theatre in Manchester. Over the last decade the Royal Exchange Theatre Com-pany has initiated and spearheaded the movement to establish theatres of national standing in the regions.

The Arts Council's policy document, The Glory of the Garden, is absolutely right in asserting that the continued vital life of the British theatre depends on firmly estab-lished centres of theatrical production in the regions. But that the first step towards implementing The Glory of the Garden should be not only severely to cut down the ability of the Royal Exchange Theatre Company to perform in its main theatre, but also to deny it the capability to develop and to perform new plays, shows the working of the

TV as incentive

In practice, disaster relief has From Mr William Belson always been only a tiny fraction of aid expenditure: £2.6m last year -

Sir. In your issue of November 9 you reported on a speech by M Whitney, Director General of th Independent Broadcasting Auth ority, to the National Associatio: for the Care and Resettlement o Offenders. Mr Whitney said that there is no evidence that television makes ordinary kids into violen

I consider this statement, coming from Mr Whitney, to be quite remarkable. Mr Whitney has long had ready access through the IBA library, to a study by this writer o the effects on boys' behaviour or long-term exposure to television

This study was based on a representative sample of 1,565. London boys aged 13-16 years. It was heavily funded by the Columbia Broadcasting System of the USA and it involved initial extensive development of research techniques. The report (Television violence and the Adolescent Boy. Gower Publishing Co. 1978) presented many findings, the principal one of which was that there was very strong evidence in support of the view that long-term exposure to television violence increased substantially the extent to which London boys engaged in acts of serious violence.

Mr Whitney offered a three-line summary of one of my findings which he had adopted from another report. He then dismissed that finding on the basis of an argument that it was really only an artefact of a tendency of the more aggressively inclined children subsequently to watch a greater amount of television violence than other children. Any careful reading of my report would have told Mr Whitney that major steps had been taken in the enquiry to deal with that possibility. In fact, recent further analyses of the data from that enquiry show that the childhood indicators of adolescent. violence tended to have a slightly. negative association with later exposure to television violence: though the violently predisposed children did a lot of TV violence viewing as the years passed, they tended to do so somewhat less than gentler children.

The oddness of Mr Whitney's position shows up in his statement that "I am not saying that there is no connection; simply that a direct cause and effect relationship is a nonsense". Mr Whitney is playing a "straw man" game. Only rather naive people would argue that the main impact of television violence is immediate and direct. What the evidence indicates is that the relationship can involve a multiplicity of factors along with television and that the effects may take years to show up fully as behaviour. But the contribution of television within that mix and over time is clear and it is a major contribution.

Paper pounds

From Mr Julian Sheffield Sir. As producer of the paper for £1 notes, I can answer R. J. Phillips's letter in The Times of November 15.

We have developed a highly durable paper for bank notes which has been available for some time. US $1 bills are printed on this quality of paper and remain in good condition for an average of eighteen months. One could expect £1 notes; to last as long.

Another letter raises the possi-bility of a £2 note. This would be a sensible compromise. No other country in the Western world has a gap as big as we will have between its top coin and bottom note. It is worth pointing out that if we have no £1 note, change from £5 for a £1.12 purchase will produce a minimum of nine coins.

Finally, the Chancellor has stated in his case for the £1 coin that it will last 40 years. I wonder how many coins in his oockets are 40 years old. Not many halfpennies. I suspect. Yours faithfully,

Sir, Public schools - and many more maintained schools besides - con-tinue to teach the basic skills of rugby football and produce contests of a high quality which are exciting and enjoyable to watch. We also believe that it is a game which should be played in the spirit of the laws or not at all. Winning at all costs and gratuitous violence have no part to play.

As a result more and more of our pupils are not prepared to continue playing the game at senior level, preferring to take exercise in more congenial ways and the game is becoming the poorer for it. Yours faithfully,

Why is it that "the empty tomb" of Jesus of Nazareth is so important for the Christian faith? Why is it that now, in 1984, when a new Bishop of Durham, supported by brother bishops, declares belief in the empty tomb optional, there is a national outcry? There are many reasons. But it will be instructive to go back a century to a previous Bishop of Durham, B. F. Westcott. He was a giant

First, there is the issue of fundamental Christian truth. Westcott had much to say about the bodily Resurrection of Jesus-Christ from the tomb. He was arguing against doubts not totally dissimilar to those expressed today. His starting point was simple: "If Christ did not rise again - the words cannot be too often repeated - then is our faith vain. Something may be left - a system of morals or the like - but that is not Christianity. The essence of Christianity lies in a miracle."

National Park. tracts of the moors. According to a new policy document published this week, the 553 square-mile park is threatened by several adverse trends.

The review identifies the park's 48 sonare miles of bracken as one of its most worrying ecological features. The weed, which poisons stock and harbours ticks that can stock and narrows tees that can kill sheep and grouse, cost the park £35,000 to control last year. But with an annual spread of 400 acres the traditional methods of control, spraying and cutting, are barely containing the plant. Aware that desperate diseases require desperate onsesses require desperate remedies, the park's advisers have taken a keen interest in the research at York University of Dr John Lawton, a blologist. He will shortly be receiving his first consignment of the bracken-esting moth Parthe des augularis from South Africa. If the moths are proven to be mited to conditions in the United Kingdom the North York Moors are likely to provide the breeding place for the first British colony. Erosion and degradation of the park's 199 square miles of moorland are spother area of destroyed by the fires of 1976, an estimated 140 square miles of the surface of the moorland has become unstable because of loss of disturbance of topsoil, subsoil and

Lesson from a Bishop of Durham

He was, of course, quite clear also that the Resurrection was not a crude "resuscitation". It was "a life which takes up into itself-all the elements of our present life, and transfigures them by a glorious change".

And so there was true hope for man as well. This was not in some evanescent immortality of the soul (a concept Westcott, along with modern analytical philosophers, could find no meaning for). No, it was a true resurrection. Yes, the problems are enormous. But there are problems anyhow. "The rejection of the mysteries of Christianity will not eliminate the element of mystery from life." But with regard to the resurrection of man, "our speculative doubts are met, as they could only be met, by a fact". The empty tomb is vital. Not that it "proved" the Resurrection of Jesus; the disciples believed when they met the risen Lord. But it pointed to the nature of his resurrection. Thus a Christian is one who can confess the Resurrection. The "earliest creed" makes this clear. "If you confess with your lips that Jesus is Lord and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved." (Romans 10.9). We must believe in Christ's sovereignty, which is confirmed by his "actual Resurrection".

This now brings us to the world of Westcott's day. These quotations all come from his book. The Gospel of the Resurrection, first published in 1865. It was an answer to critical questions then being raised. Another book, Essays and Reviews, had brought Continental scepticism on to the agenda of the Church of England in 1860. The faith of many was attempt by Westcott to get things into perspective. But the flood gates had opened. As in any area of life it is easier to knock down than build up. Unfortunately there were not enough Westcotts to go round to champion the faith. And all the Western Churches were affected.

So how were the Churches to respond? They did so in, at least, two ways. First, there was the response of the Roman Catholic Church. It reacted with the big stick. There was the First Vatican Council (1869-70) and the definition of Papal infallability. Then in 1907 there was the outlawing of "modernism" by Pius X. Secondly, there was the response of Protestant Churches such as the Anglican Church. This was a very simple response. It was, in effect, to do nothing. The result was then, and has been since, a steady slide into "unbelief". Today there is great confusion. The "Jenkins affair" has shown that a number of diocesan bishops are not fulfilling their canonical obligations "to uphold sound and wholesome doctrine". But there is a feeling abroad that the limit has been reached; hence the outcry. So in the intellectual ferment of the nineteenth century the Roman Catholics overreacted one way and the Protestants another. The Roman Catholics were too strict. The Protestants were too lax.

But under Pope John XXIII the Roman Church decided to redress its balance. At the Second Vatican Council the Roman Church loosened up. Many are now arguing that the main-line Protestant Churches have to redress their balance if they are to survive as Christian churches. With them it is not a doctrinal looseningup but a tightening-up that is needed.

The National Roller Hockey Association, the sport's governing body, thought they were getting somewhere at last. Central promptly went on strike.

The low profile which has been forced on the game does not change even for the top competitions. Today Great Britain are in Paris for the start of the week-long world group B championships, an all-play-all tournament involving 12 nations. The players are confident that they will finish in the top three, thus enabling them to go up to join the giants like Argentina, Italy and Spain in group A; however, they are resigned to the fact that any such achievement will be greeted with the usual deafening

Roller hockey emerged in this country as an off-shoot of roller skating in 1879; its pedigree is thus only fractionally shorter than that of the modern version of hockey, which was developed here in the mid-nineteenth century. It achieved considerable popularity in the early 1900s before becoming one of this country's casualties of the Second World War. Now there are just 1,261 registered players,

Carthage does not improve with time; at least, not for me.

"Delenda est Carthago", the elder Cato advised the Roman Senate. "Carthage must be destroyed." They did a thor ough job: it burned for 17 days, after which it was levelled, ploughed and salted as a mark of sterility, and anyone who can turn that into a tourist attrac-tion earns my keenest admiration. All I could do at Carthage was try to summmon up the ghosts: of Queen Dido, its legendary founder, of Hannibal's 40 elephants crossing the distant Alps; of the thousands of children sacrificed to the gods Baal Ammon and Taanit.

Neighbouring Sidi Bou Saiid always gets me. Gets me pleasurably, I mean. I don't mind the summer birdcages or the nougat sellers or those predatory frauleins from Frankfurt - because it is still a livedrandy dogs and doors are chunky enough to withstand the worst of Cato's punishment. Diverting to Matmata, we saw how conditions (scorching in summer, freezing in winter) dictate the lifestyle of haouch hafera, troplodyte dwelling. The basic plan consists of a central area 10 metres deep and open to the sky, about which, gouged from the earth, are a series of cave-rooms with walls plastered in clay. There is a secondary theory that the habitations were defensive in design; but this is obviously dotty since anyone could flush out his enemy like rabbits in a burrow, or simply starve them. An hotel, the Sidi Driss, operates on the troglo-dyte principle, offering shared accommodation for about £1 a night. "Shared" is a bleak euphemism for bunk and candle in a togetherness situation with nine others in a cave-dormitory. A second diversion took us to the Douz, one of the gateways nomadic M'razigs, visited on market days by fiercer tribesmen of the Touareg. There is a concentration of white cubed

Escaping the single room trap

On the face of it, it looks like extortion; according to the invoice I have before me the basic cost of this one-week holiday was £359, plus - and this is the sting - an extra £105 for the single room supplement! It seems a high price to pay for the privilege of sleeping alone.

Single room supplements are one of those extras which, when added to the "come on" price at the head of the brochure page, can make a dramatic difference to the amount you actually pay for the holiday. Like tarantulas and folklore evenings, they come in that holiday category marked "best avoided".

Single room supplements are designed to compensate the hotelier for the loss incurred in etting out a twin-bedded room to one person. When the charge is moderate and made in high season, it seems reasonable, but a levy like the one listed above, which increases the price by a swinging 29 per cent for a holiday in September seems very close to a rip-off.

Price Includes Hot Meal and Baggage

The good news is that not all Jamaica, Antigua and St Lucia, single room supplements are as which in some cases can high as this; some operators do not charge them at all and others drop them outside the high season. They are always worth arguing about, especially in the low season when the operator will probably be quite willing to absorb the charge if the alternative is an unsold holiday or an empty seat on the aircraft. You don't have to agree to them, so at least out of the high season why not put up a

To avoid single room supplements entirely requires a little research but Thomas Cook, for example, have oneperson studio apartments available at Puerto Pollensa in Mailorca and Puerto de la Cruz in Tenerife free of supplements throughout the summer, the basic price starts at £210. which in some cases can represent a saving of between £200-£300 a week. The same deal holds good for Speedbird who say, guardedly, that on a number of holidays over certain periods, no single room supplements apply - they indicate which in the price panels in their brochures. At the Tamarind Cove in Barbados, Speed-bird vary the single room cost from £114 to more than £300, but this charge is waived from April to December provided the guest books half-board. These are the low-season months, but the weather is still delightful. Both Tradewinds and Speedbird also point out that apart from the cost saving, single guests also enjoy the comfort of a large, twin-bedded room.

Those who fancy a winter or spring break somewhere less exotic can visit the luxurious Hotel Molins in Mallorca with Thomson Holidays, where single room supplements are not charged until May. Thom-son's Worldwide brochure contains similar offers in St Lucia, Kenya, the Seychelies and Sri Lanka. Many of the smaller operators will try and pair up their guests if requested to do so, and so avoid charging the supplement, which is certainly a service worth asking for.

Brilliance to the manoir born

Good news has the bad habit of being unreadably dull. To excite interest, praise must be sharpened with reservation, even a hint of malice.

In the face of all that is elegant, restful and right about Le Manoir aux Quat' Saisons it is churlish to remark that they do seem to have done rather odd things with the decor. Poles from which to hang the curtains are probably an appropriate choice for a Tudor manor house, but why swaddle them in flesh-coloured chintz, making them look as if they have been splinted with Elastoplast? The most recent lines in the scrolls of praise about this splendid hostelry appear in the 1985 Good Hotel Guide, published last month. Awarding the hotel its César distinction for the most brilliant newcomer, the guide says: Whether the Manoir should be rated as a hotel or restaurant with rooms is a moot point. What is clear is that the Blanes' hotel has effortlessly shot into the First Division. with Raymond Blanc's brilliance as a chef fully complemented by his wife lenny's flair in running the

Sloanes, stars and too much movie snow

that Harpers & Queen magazine and the travel firm Bladon Lines have teamed up this year for a special offer: a special Sloane Ranger skiing week, complete with specially arranged lunchtime bunfights. The place? Val d'Isère.

My wife and I had never been to a first-class ski resort. We left amid a flurry of reports that there was a severe January snow shortage in the main European resorts. We had only skied twice before, anywhere.

The first pleasant surprise in Val d'Isère is to find that it is not intimidatingly enormous. It has gained its reputation from the quality and extent of the pistes up above. It has also consolidated that reputation by the well-known technique of everything. If you get tempted by the shop on the main street which specializes in Mickey Mouse objets, inspect the price to be organized in inverse proportion to the size of the objet. I enjoyed the most delicious lrish comee i nave ever lingered over in the you rairly are." patisserie opposite the Mickey trip to the bank.

Val d'Isère likes you to know that it is chic. French toddlers are mostly tugged around by rather unchic young women who look like nannies brought along to mind the children while the parents are on the slopes. Elderly ladies have designer poodles and the delica-tessen sells Weetabix as a pricey foreign luxury. The town's own radio station (slogan: "Radio Val - ce n'est pas banal") announces that Roger Moore has been seen in town. Haute conture early this year consisted of rainbow-coloured one-piece suits whose spectrum of colours began at the feet and ended at the collar.

Black pistes for the expert, gentler slopes for the family to enjoy, an exclusive abundance of sun, a rich choice of hotels with traditional Swiss hospitality, many self-catering chalets and apartments to rent, cross-country skiing, curling, après-ski, typical "raclette" and "fondue" evenings, a wealth of other activities for the skier and non-skier alike ...

The Valais region of Switzerland promises an unforgettable winter holiday in this beautiful treasureland. Just 1½ hours from Geneva.

bean soup, caesar salad, choptinkling piano, stars dropping by - will probably demand strict observation of the ceremony. Don't expect too much holiday spirit, however, from preening waiters who generally regard the customers as extras on their stage.

A slightly lower key but equally authentic note is struck by Surprise, a bright, modern diner-style establishment, hung with photographs and contemporary art posters. Their excel-lent salad bar and "down-home" menu (corned beef hash. waffles, grilled scafood) will be extended on Thursday evening (two sittings at 6.30pm and 9pm) to include a traditional Thanksgiving dinner. Pilgrim's Punch, prawn and crab bisque and pumpkin pie will flank the main course. The dinner costs £15.50 a head, and parties of 10 or more will be able to carve their own turkey.

For those who can't face such a huge feast - and American restaurants are not noted for their modest portions - an enjoyable, holiday atmosphere. should still be available at any of Bob Payton's varied but thorough establishments. Special Thanksgiving pizzas, top-ped with turkey, will be on offer at his cavernous Chicago Pizza Pie Factory.

Mr Payton's latest venture, typically titled Payton Plaice. offers an engaging scalood menu. Deep-fried plaice and clams, crab claws and scafood salads provide a reliable choice, but the food almost takes second place to the spectacular and witty interior design, which pushes a nautical theme over the top and half-way back again.

Next Thursday is Thanksgiving Fishing nets, harpoons, "Moby Dick" videos and a parrot in a cage are among the more restrained effects. To prove that the English can successfully adopt American-style catering, Thanksgiving Day celebrants should consider The traditional Thanksgiving binner revolves around a roast pubs developed by Imperial lnns and Taverns. Sullivans has res- branches at Ilford, Ruislip and thoroughly American res-taurants, Joe Allen and Sur-Golders Green, as well as the one I visited, just off the A3 roundabout at Tolworth.

The spacious pub premises ric, bare-brick walled basement have been tastefully converted restaurant in Covent Garden, a into a thoughtfully-separated dual operation, bar and res-taurant Polished wooden floors and shutters, smart, upholstered chairs, and an array of parrot prints and motifs, though no live specimens as at Payton Plaice, dominate the decor. The menu available in the restaurant - there is a shorter list of bar snacks - offers a fairly comprehensive range of contemporary American food. Baked potato skins filled with cheese and bacon (£1.65), bay prawn salad and nachos, corn chips, with chilli and guacamole dips (£1.85) make savoury and substantial starters. There is a good selection of burgers - hickory with smoked barbecue sauce at £3.15 is recommended - and an enterprising list of specials. These include chicken fingers (£4.35), "surf n'turf" (steak with prawns, £7.35) and a wonderfully tender steak teriyaki (£5.95), which has acquired its texture, and its name, from the traditional Japanese marinade of soy sauce and rice wine. Huge hot fudge sundaes (£1.65), deli-style lemon cheesecakes, creamy coffees, imported beers (Michelob, Budweiser) and polite, well-drilled service complete an operation where English, as well as Americans. will feel at home.

Beaujolais tasting Old hands make light, fruity work of '84 Nouveau anniversary of Britain's annual outbreak of Beaujolais Nouveau fever and in order to mark this several of the '84 Nouveaux. momentous event I decided to organize a blind tasting. Beaujolais Nouveau, as every restaurateur, winebar owner and wine merchant has been quick to remind me over the last two days, is fun. It also happens to be a big money spinner and even though only four million bottles or so are likely to be quaffed in the. UK this year (about a million less than in 83) the wine trade is unlikely to complain.

The wine drinker, however. well complain, for the 1984 Nouveau, as our tasting panel discovered, is light, fruity and not very exciting. This is principally because the Beaujolais region, like everywhere else in France this year, has had difficult weather. A cold wet spring delayed the flowering. The summer was hot but topher Fielden, and Don Hewitalso very dry and the small. son, winebar owner and deditough Beaujolais grapes showed signs of suffering in the drought- son kindly let the panel use a like conditions. Fortunately, room at Shampers, his winebar heavy rain in September caused in London's West End, and as the grapes to swell up to roughly usual all the wines were tasted their normal size but when picking began on September 24 it was still wet - which no doubt accounts for the pale colour of lems, and no doubt due to the considerable technical skills of the region's winemakers, some good 1984 Nouveau has been made. In fact, given the weather and the many pessimistic reports, our tasting panel found the wines more consistent and much better than they had expected. It is noticeable that the most successful Nouveaux come from houses whose The real blending and other winemaking taste skills are well known.

The 1984 Thorin Beanjolais Nouveau, in eighth place (Asda £2.49, Berry, Bros & Rudd, 3 St James's Street, London SWI. £2.95) was considered "well balanced" by CF and "attractive quaffing plonk" by DH. The soft, fruity Pasquier-Desvignes 1984 Nouveau was next (International Stores £2.49, Arthur Cooper £2.59) followed by Pierre Ferraud, a "pleasant easy swigger (CF); (Malmaison Wine Club £3, Caves de la Madeleine, 301 Fulham Road, London SW10, £2.99).

In joint eleventh place was the "lively, spritzy" (JMQ), "not bad, not fantastic" (DH) Chanut Frères wine (Haynes, Hanson & Clarke, 36 Kensington Church Street, London W8, £2.99, Hungerford Wine Company, 128 High Street, Hungerford, £3.07) plus the "acidic soft" (JH) and "lightweight" (LB) Beaujolais Propriété 1984
Nouveau (Waitrose £2.35. Fine Fare £2.49).

Primeur (Curzon Wine Com-pany, 11 Curzon Street, London W1, £2.99) was next and LB went overboard about this and '83 vintages. It will be best "attractive good Gamay character" giving it her top mark. No one else was that keen.

One warning: this year's light wine is not unlike the '80 or '81 vintages - and certainly lacks the depth and fruit of the '83 drunk before Christmas.

Slow-growing conifers

IN THE GARDEN Now's the turn of the green dwarfs

A collection of dwarf conifers in their natural habitat makes a beautiful display, and some of the finest can be seen at the rock gardens in Kew and Wisley in Surrey and at the Royal Botanic Gardens in Edinburgh, Visits to such gardens are a pleasure in themselves, and the pleasure is increased by the new ideas and plant associations they bring.

Soil is the key to successful conifers. Most prefer a warm, water-retentive neutral soil although many will tolerate an alkaline soil or one with a high percentage of clay or sand. They dislike shallow soils over limestone, or those with suspect drainage. Before trying the slower growing forms you should get rid of surplus water and make sure the soil is not too sticky or that water does not stand for too long.

If your soil is poor or thin, do not despair. Nearly all soils can be made better with the addition of well-rotted organic matter, farmyard manure is not required unless the soil is very poor. Add humus to the soil when preparing. ideally in the autumn, or at planting time rather than not at all.

Shade is not recommended and none of the smaller or slower growing forms is happy in it. Yew and some of the green junipers will accept some shade but they will all do better if they are in a situation where they get good light. The forms with coloured foliage must be given good light because without it the nectarine, although these for the most part are nothing to worry about. One disease which appears year after year, however, is Peach Leaf Curl, Taphrina deformans. This is not usually a killer, although it weakens the tree and makes it look unsightly while it is in leaf. It has been with us for a long time

Once they are given good light again, however, colour in the foliage will eventually return. Should it be considered necessary to plant conifers under trees, try to ensure they are planted in the area nearest to good

When you have chosen a site, do not dig a hole and plant. As much of the surrounding ground as possible should be dug to encourage the plant to make new roots as quickly as it can and to take over the ground where it is growing. Do not leave organic matter in a layer, it must always be mixed in with the existing soil. Depending upon the eventual size of the plant, prepare a hole big enough to take the roots easily and pack a good, peaty mixture around them to give them a good start.

There are many hundreds of good slow-growing dwarf conifers and I can do more than suggest a few to whet the appetite, including some with coloured foliage. They come in a variety of shapes: some are prostrate, some columnar, some are pyramidal and some almost globose. As they all combine happily together their siting should be considered carefully so they have room to grow as their shape

Of the prostrate forms I like the Juniperus horizontalis family. There is a wide choice, from J h Banff with its Banff is not a vigorous plant but Emerald Spreader is quite strong and spreads to at least 3ft. I also like J h Blue Chip because the foliage is finer, but also quite strong. To complete this family one must include the form glauca as this is an ideal groundcoverer - give it good light and an open position to get the best from it.

Spreading, but not prostrate forms include J x media Gold Coast, which has yellow foliage through the winter. Similar but more compact is J x media Old Gold, which makes a splash in any Upright forms make ideal "question marks" in the garden and their shape will suggest their position. Juniperus scopulorum Skyrocket - the name gives an idea of its shape - is thin and columnar, grows 7-8ft high and has grey-green leaves. Picea pungens Kosteriana, has very blue foliage but with the true spruce shape. Probably a better colour is P p Hoopsii with bright blue foliage and a distinct upright habit.

Taxus baccata Standishii is very mucha column with yellow foliage, slow to reach a height of 3ft.

You may have difficulty in getting your tongue round the names of some of the pyramidal forms, but they will give you much pleasure in years to come: Chamaecyparis pisifera Gold Spangle is a real beauty, an open pyramid would describe its habit. The rich yellow foliage remains a good colour through winter. Juniperus chinensis Kuriwao Gold forms rounded though upright plants, its foliage is a good yellow and ideal for a pot plant in a border. Juniperus squamata Blue Star is 15m high and its spread a little wider. contrasted with other plants its blue foliage makes it a good one for almost any garden position. Thuja occidentalis Holmstrups Yellow is almost a pyramid but with a dense habit and rich golden foliage - much better than the commonly grown T.o Rheingold, a squat pyramid with foliage which is more gold than yellow.

Pinus mugo Mops is a dwarf, rounded bush with dark green foliage which sets off any yellow foliage forms. grown nearby. One of the nicest but one of the slowest growing is Picea glauca Albertlana Conica, about 12in high but in the shape of a distinct pyramid, It remains a good colour through the year and in the spring the new shoots are a rich, bright green.

The heights given are approximate and they will be reached after 10 years or more depending on how well the plant has done. Plants are available from Bressingham Gardens, Diss, Norfolk. Prices vary according to plants but are about £3 each, although some would be more expensive.

Flowers in the summer, berries in the winter and leaves all year round the Stranvassis is an evergreen shrub which deserves to have a space reserved for it in every garden. It is also more compact in habit and it also more compact in habit and it does not reach the height of the type, often being broader than it is high. Leaves often assume a reddish hue in the autumn and There is also a variety called

Berries on trees and shrubs give us a tremendous amount of colour during the autumn and early winter and, as a rule, these berries blend with the leaves which are changing colour about now. In towns birds are more likely to strip plants of their berries than in the country. Pyracantha is grown extensively in towns and I usually find this is one of the plants the birds choose last, so that berries remain on the bushes longer. The common name of Pyracantha is the firethorn, in relation to the scarlet berries of some forms of this plant. There are a number of varieties, all thorny, and they fit very well into most gardens as well Tolerant of most soils so long as they are not heavy and wet, they dislike cold feet during cold winters. Pruning is scarcely necessary. Unless you need to use the knife because a branch is growing out of shape, little or no

cutting is called for. They are really better left to their own devices. As wall plants, however, there may be a need to restrict the plant to confined spaces and the plant could need an annual trimming. Pyracantha coccinea is the one most usually seen, reaching 15ft as a wall shrub. Of all the forms this is the one the birds go for first as bright orange red fruits cover the plant. I prefer the more orange berries of the form Lalandii, however. P rogersiana is much more compact and less tall, about 10ft. Bernes here are yellowy orange but the foliage, being so much smaller, gives the shrub a delay. dainty look. A form of rogersiana called Orange Charmer has orange fruits and is pressive onal pots which Leach was inspired by Japanese. Korean and Chinese wares and potters in the show are Sarah Walton and Jane Hamlyn.

One of the problems with modern English domestic pottery is how to decorate the surface. Christopher Dresser, a designer and writer on the decorative arts who died in 1904, insisted: "No plate should have a landscape painted upon also influenced by his long it, nor a figure, nor a group of flowers".

There is much to be said for the philosophy of doubling "the bid under your nose". Although on this occasion, perhaps Bergen (West) regretted his double of four spades when Sontag (South) retired to five clubs. But a spade lead, a spade ruff, and a diamond switch would have produced 300, a larger penalty than awaited four spades.

Bergen tried for the shadow rather than the substance by switching to his singleton heart. Sion won, and played the 4J Now the defence could not prevent Sion from ruffing his losing heart with the 4K, and later discarding his losing diamond on the 4J. In the closed room. If The Secret Garden is a traditional children's fare, Fraggle Rock is entertainment for, and out of, the electronic age. For the uninitiated it is the brainchild of Jim Henson and continues his successful Muppet formula. The Fraggles are jolly little people who live under a lighthouse unknown to the kindly keeper.

The key to its appeal is colour and movement and the Songbook, a made-for-video production, reflects this, being an anthology of Fraggle numbers with the words provided for those inspired to join in.

Complementing the Songbook are four episodes yet to be seen on television. Fraggle Rock makes no claim to stretch the mind but it is cheerful and goodhearted and children could be served a lot worse.

Pioneering picture: The poet Vladimir Mayakovsky photographed in 1924 by Rodchenko

Rakish vision of a Russian radical

One of Alexander Rodchenko's tial for propaganda and quickly best known photopraphs is of seized on the idea of using it to his friend, the poet Vladimir Mayakovsky. A more haunting portrait would be hard to magine. Yet it becomes more than just a powerful photograph when one realizes that it was taken in 1924, the very year Rodchenko bought his first camera and that it was of a sequence of six taken at the same time.

Later, Rodchenko was to write: "One has to take several different shots of a subject from different point of view and in different situations, as if one examined in the round rather than looked through the same keyhole again and again".

Rodchenko's photography-in-the-round, including the famous set of Mayakovsky pictures, can at present be seen in Bradford where the National Museum of Photography has revived the successful exhibition of two years ago at the Museum of Modern Art in Oxford. In 1924, against a background of revolutionary fervour, Rodchenko turned his back on painting to concentrate on photography. The Bolshevik uprising of 1917 had revolutio-nized attitudes to photography, which responded by becoming less painterly. Lenin was swift to identify the medium's poteu-

"Synchronicity" is a strong opening and the sound, which can sometimes be a problem with filmed concerts is sharp and clear. It is a relief that we do not have to go through the "Hello Atlanta" routine, but there is a nasty moment during "Walking On The Moon" when Sting commandeers a video camera. He may write good lyrics; but he is no great cameraman.

The filming is workmanlike, but there are too many jump cuts and shots of the crowd: it may be encouraging for the group to know that their audiences can song along, but it does little for the viewer.

And since Godley and Creme played in a band themselves, the cameras tend to be on the right members at the right time, which is sadly not always the case with some rock filming. We are also allowed to see various shots of the backing singers and a fair amount of Stewart Copeland and Andy Summers, while Sting in his multi-coloured jacket, jumps about in the centre of the stage.

gggggggg $\operatorname{Stand}$ with gggggggg Ramesses II against the Hittites in the first battle in history.

At the entrance to the vast columned halls of Karnak, vivid reliefs conjure up for you the battle of Qadesh in 1285 B.C.

Here, in the first detailed account of war in history, are the Pharaoh's gallant exploits which saved the day for the Egyptians. Though the battle was indecisive, Ramesses II did not flinch from recording his great personal victory with colossal statues and inscriptions. This is, after all, the king also known as Ozymandias. This is only one of the fascinating moments on a 1985 Swan Hellenic Cruise. But whether the place is Karnak or Cornth, Massada or Mycenae, Yalta or Istanbul, each visit is more rewarding because we help you see it in context.

Travelling by ship, the comfortable Orpheus, ensures that a fortnight's cruise is relaxing as well as rewarding. It also provides an unregimented atmosphere in which you can enjoy the company of people who share only one qualification: an enquiring mind. Fares - from £777 - offer unquestionable value. They include most shore excursions, all gratuities and comprehensive insurance

There are twenty-two cruises from Spring to Christmas in 1985 Each promises to bring the Mediterranean's rich past unforgettably to life. For a brochure, send the coupon, call 01-247 7532 or see your

Films on TV

Any discussion of style in the cinema must very soon embrace the name of Max Ophuls. Few directors have so dazzlingly enriched their films with the formal resources of camerawork and decor, and his reputation has grown steadily since his early death in 1957.

In the cinema, as anywhere else, style is an elusive quality not easily defined. In the case of Ophuls it equates with a rich visual elegance associated particularly with central Europe, Though Ophüls was born in Germany, his spiritual home was Vienna where he spent his formative years directing for the theatre.

His cinema career was nomadic. Forced out of Germany when the Nazis came to power he worked during the 1930s in Italy, Holland and France. During the 1940s, like so many Jewish refugees, he found himself in Hollywood, where he made Letter From an Unknown Woman and The Reckless

His last years were spent back in France. In 1950 he made what is still by far the best cinema version of Schnitzler's bitter-sweet merry-go-round of love, La Ronde; and after two more films, embarked on his most ambitious project, his first in colour and shot in Cinema-scope and four-track stereo, Lola Montes. Showing on BBC2 today

(5-6.50pm), it is the story of the dancer and courtesan who towards the end of her career is reduced to appearing in a circus in New Orleans, selling kisses at a dollar a time. The main episodes of her colourful life are recalled in flashback - her love affair with Franz Liszt and her scandalous involvement with the King of Bavaria from which she was rescued by an adoring student.

Eventually she falls on hard times and takes up an offer of employment from the circus. The film was partly planned as a vehicle for the then sex symbol of the French cinema, Martine Carol; and a cosmopolitan cast also includes Peter Ustinov, as the ringmaster, and Anton Walbrook, as the Bavarian king.

The original version ran for 140 minutes and was a commercial disaster when it opened in Paris at the end of 1955. In desperation, the producers a stage actor, Werner emerged made extensive cuts, reducing it as an international star during to 90 minutes and running all the 1960s after his engaging the flashbacks together, so that performance in François Trufthe narrative was barely comprehensible. The version being and Werner died in the same screened today is faithful to Ophuls's structure and at 105

minutes is the longest print in Also recommended It proved to be Ophuls's last picture - within 15 months of its release he had died of a rheumatic heart condition - and it is also one of his best and most typical. He not only showed an impressive grasp of the wide screen but proved again that he was a master of the fluid camera. The full 360 degree revolve around Lola as she begins her reminiscences is but one of a succession of stunning effects.

The excuse for showing Lola Montès (not that it needs one) is the recent death of the Austrian actor. Oskar Werner, who helped to set the film up and also played the student. Mainly faut's Jules and Jim. Truffaut week.

THIS WEEK NEXT WEEK: New Sunday current affairs programme oninay current arrars programme, presumably designed to rival ITV's Weekend World. Introduced by David Dimbleby, it includes a major political interview, review of the Sunday newspapers, a chance to air unfashionable views and a look back on the past week by a personality in the news. 8BC1, tomorrow, 1-1.50pm.

THE PRISONER OF ZENDA: Anthony Hope's enduringly popular yarn of adventure and intrigue adapted in six parts by James Andrew Hall. Malcolm Sinclair plays the dual role of Rudolf Regended the aristocentia union of the plays the dual role of Rudolf Rassendyll, the aristocratic young Englishman on a visit to the exotic European state of Runtania, and his exact double King Rudolf. BBC1, tomorrow, 6-6.30pm.

THE SOUTH BANK SHOW: Profile of Mstislav Rostropovich, one of the finest cellists of the century, who left his native Soviet Union in the 1970s to pursue a career in the West. The programme includes film taken at Rostropovich's own festival at Aldeburgh, where he talks about his life and his relationship with Benjamin Britten, who wrote several works for him, All ITV regions, tomorrow, 10.30-11 35pm

THE STATE OF DEMOCRACY: A quartet of former Prime Ministers – Lord Home of the Hirsel, Lord Wilson of Rievaulx, Edward Heath and James Callaghan - come together on the fortieth anniversary of the Hansard Society to discuss the state of democracy in Britain and the future of parliamentary government. Channel 4, Tues, 10.45-11.45pm.

THE BOX OF DELIGHTS: A treat for children in the run-up to Christmas is this first television adaption of John Mesefield's classic story of a boy's adventures during his school holiday. Probably the most expensive series made for children's television at £1m. It combines animation with live action and boasts a strong cast including Robert Stephens, Patrick Troughton and James Grout. The boy is played by Devin Stanfield, a 13-year-old from Eastbourne, PSC1 Wed 5-5 20pts BBC1, Wed, 5-5.30pm.

THEATRE

Of mice, men and Mills

Forty-five years ago a young John Mills thrilled West End theatregoers with a gripping lead performance in John Steinbeck's stage adaptation of his best selling novel Of Mice and Men. Mills, predictably, heat on to further processes the went on to further successes; the play, inexplicably, went back on the shelf, where as far as London is concerned it has remained ever since.

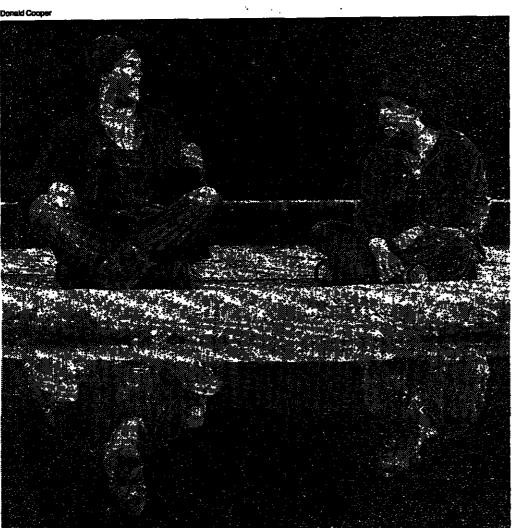

! It returns on Monday, to the Mermaid Theatre, with Lou Hirsch in Mills's old role as the fast-talking George, one of a pair of itinerant workers on a Californian farm; the other — a kentle, simple giant called Lennie – is played by Clive Mantle. Susan Penhaligon has the key part of Curley's wife and George Bullen directs.

Hirsch is the driving force behind the new production.
After taking part in a BBC children's programme about Steinbeck's book, he has relentlessly pursued his dream of bringing it back to the stage. It has proved something of an uphill struggle. Eventually, however, he and Bullen succeeded in having it put on last year at the Queen's Theatre, Hornchurch, and to everybody's amazement it was almost a sellout. "By luck we found it was on the schools' GCE syllabus, so we got a lot of people along and people seemed to like it", Hirsch says.

From there it went to the Nuffield Theatre, Southampton.

And so back to London Hirsch was born in Brooklyn, studied at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama, and has been working professionally in Britain since 1979. He is probably the best known as Hymie in the BBC television series We'll Meet Again about the Yanks in wartime Britain.

Final countdown to the launch of Telecom

The highly-tuned and professional British Telecom marketing campaign has been running so smoothly in the last few days that even the final terms came out yesterday in nice near round numbers. A price of 130p a share, payable in three doses of 50p, 40p and 40p, values BT at £7,800 million, second only to BP in terms of market capitalization.

There has been a fair degree of hype in the last few weeks, but the surge of popular interest in the offer cannot be explained away as a fabrication of the PR men. Nobody at the lead merchant banker. Kleinwort, Benson, was foolish enough to put a number publicly on how many applications they expect from the "retail market." The stock market could still take one of its sudden turns before the offer closes on November 28. Privately, however, the word is that, come the first day of dealings, December 3, British Telecom is likeley to find itself with at least 1.5 million shareholders. A good proportion will doubtless sell during the course of the next two years, but on these estimates alone the Government would have good cause to be pleased with the response to its wider share ownership campaign.

It is clear that, whether he takes the telephone vouchers or the one for 10 bonus issue (see the advice given in Family Money on page 26) the small investor is being offered a very healthy return over the next 18 months. If he applies for £520 worth of shares, for example, and sells after paying the second call and receiving his voucher next summer, he could easily make an annualized return of 20 per cent plus, assuming that the share price remains around the issue price.

The market was talking yesterday about the shares going to an initial premium of 10p to 15p when dealings start on December. In the short term the fact that the institutions look like getting fewer shares than they need, will put some sort of floor under the price. Kleinwort did not demur yesterday from the unlikely-shared view in the City that the Government has been happy to leave a margin of 10 per cent in the offer price for the aftermarket. As it is, the price of 130p is at the upper end of the range that was indicated at the time of the launch of the pathfinder prospectus three weeks ago.

THe Treasury shuld not be too unhappy with the proceeds from the sale. The sum - £3,900 million is more thant it looked like gettiing earlier in the year when officials were exercised by fears of aninstitutional "buyers' strike" forcing down the offer price.

The 130p price puts BT on a prospective p/e of 9.35, with a gross dividend yield of 7.14 per cent. The rating is not far out of line with AT&T and the Bell operating companies, confirming the City's view that the corporation still has some way to go before it gets the glamour rating its PR men have been working so hard to promote. BT holds out the prospect of a solid earnings stream, with the potential of becoming rather more if privatization and competiton in a fastgrowing market have the invigorating effect government ministers are hoping

One caveat at this stage is prompted by the unprecedented market smoothing operation undertaken in the last few weeks, when even the Chancellor subordinated his autumn statement to the need to prepare the ground for a successful BT flotation. If there are nasty surprises lurking in the economic or political woodwork, they will come out in due

For the time being, Kleinwort and the others involved in the BT exercise - by a factor of a least eight, the largest primary share offering ever attempted in the UK have good cause to be pleased with themselves. They have deserved their

The next showdown between House of Fraser and Lonrho, the shareholder it though had gone away for good, cannot be far away. Earlier this week the Fraser board formally sought the resignation of Mr Roland "Tiny" Rowland and Lord Duncan-Sandys, Lonrho's two nominees on the board. The deadline that was set, came and passed without an answer, one way or another. Lonrho directors are due to meet on Monday to consider the

Having thought initially it was rid of its turbulent major shareholder and could settle to the job of running a department store group with Harrods at its centre, Fraser is now faced with two headaches.

The Egyptian brothers Ali and Salah Al Fayed want two seats on the board but say they will not move in until Lonrho's directors move out. Backing their desires is the near 30 per cent Fraser stake they bought from Lonrho for £138 million on November 2. They maintain that there was a gentleman's agreement that the Lonrho directors would resign as soon as the shares changed hands.

Yesterday the Egyptians went out of their way to quell rising doubts that they are not the real owners of the Fraser shareholding, but merely a front for others. The Lonrho shares are held by N C Lombard Street Nominees for Precis (317) Ltd, a company whose name is about to be changed to Alfayed Investment and Trust (UK) Ltd.

The other headache is caused by Sir Gordon Borrie at the Office of Fair Trading who is exercising his statutory right and assessing whether the ownership of such a large stake by one company could in any way represent a merger worthy of a Monopolies Commission inquiry. It is understood his department has asked to talk with Lonrho on the Still watching events is the Monopolies Commission panel, which began a fresh inquiry after Lourho endeavoured to put more of its directors on the Fraser board. This was ordered under the section of the Fair Trading Act which deals with an extension of material influence. The panel is having to look through the smoke screen caused by the disposal by Lonrho of a large stake (to the Al Fayeds) and the subsequent acquisition of a small one (in the market).

Little seems to have changed in the attitude of Lonrho toward the House of Fraser and for the Commission to call a halt to its investigation would be distinctly Lonrho's strengths however continue to ebb. The previous almost solid, and misguided, media support, has gone and Mr Edward du Cann, Lonrho's political pillar, has lost his chairmanship of the 1922 Committee of Conservative back-

How many dealers make a market?

The virtual collapse of Argos Metals and the strenuous efforts of the liquidator to keep the company going may seem small beer when compared with the Johnson Matthey debacle. But Argos's poblems do pose important questions about how the platinum market operates and whether more generally met trading companies have an adequate capital structure.

Platimum is not an insignificant market. This year's estimated platinum supply (excluding related metls like palladium of 2.58 million ounces is worth about $850 million (£675 million at the present price of approximately $330 an ounce. Yet the free market price in London is indicated by three dealers in a telephone market. One of them, Argos, is capitalized at a mere £20,000.

The immediate question, especially if the stockbroking firm Grieveson Grant is correct in its recent calculation that platinum supply will fall behind demand, is whether a reasonably orderly price-fixing mechanism can be preserved. Three companies may be just about enough to make a market, but if Argos does go under outsiders might be sceptical about Samuel Montagu's and Aryton Metails twice daily telephone sessions. The longer term question is whether too many companies trading in rapidly expanding minor metals markets are inadequately capitalized for the boom which could occur. Nobody gains, least of all consumers, if metal prices are destabilized by the collapse of traders who could not shoulder the risks. It is unclear who, if anybody, is responsible for overseeing let alone regulating such companies in the City's scheme of things.

Inflation rate rises to 5% but PSBR is on target

By David Smith Economics Correspondent

Britain's rate of inflation rose to 5 per cent in October, from 4.7 per cent in September. The rise, which Whitehall statisticians do not regard as the start of an upward trend in inflation, is a result of higher petrol and beer prices, couples with smaller across-the-board, price increases.

The retail prices index rose 0.6 per cent to 357.7 (January 15, 1974=100) in October, from 355.5 in September. The increase over the 12 months of 5 per cent is said to be consistent with the Treasury's autumn statement forecast that inflation will average 4.75 per cent during the fourth quarter of this

The public sector borrowing requiremnet for October was also released yesterday. It was £448 million compared with £622 million in September. The cumulative PSBR in the 1984-85 financial year is £7,674 boosted the index, as did higher million. As a result of the "front-end loading" of the costs. This is because the European Communities' account with the Paymaster General had been built up in anticipation of the £527m refund. The PSBR reduction in October was to 30th September 1984 the Perpetual Group Income Fund has outperformed all other authorised unit trusts in the income fund sector for capital growth. A rise in the offer price of units of 130%, compares to a rise of only 45% in an average Building Society Share Account - both figures assume net income has been added back-while the dividend has increased each year since the first distribution in September 1980.

The Fund aims for a higher than average, and rising level of income together with growth in the value of the underlying capital, and at Perpetual we believe that the results of the Fund are consistent with these objectives.

The chart above illustrates the effect of investing, and maintaining £10,000 in a Building Society on the one hand, and the Perpetual Group Income Fund on the other. In each case, income net of the basic rate of Income Tax, and any capital growth, have been withdrawn annually - in order to keep a constant £10,000 in each

A unit holding in the Income Fund would have generated a total of £12,229 of income and growth since June 1979, and still have maintained a£10,000 capital balance. A Building Society Share Account, on the other hand, would have earned only £4,442 over the same period whilst retaining the original £10,000 investment. Figures to 30th September 1984.

Managers'

Annual Report

Act Now!

We believe that the ability of the principal economies of the world to control inflation will enable economic recovery to continue and world trade to expand. This should enable companies worldwide to achieve higher profitability, leading to an increasing confidence which will allow investors to continue to re-rate share values favourably.

The latest Managers' Annual Report, just released, explains the investment philosophy of the Fund and sets out the impressive investment results. As well as reporting on the current investments held by the Fund it outlines the Managers' view of current prospects for the U.K. equity market in particular, and illustrates how the results of the Fund compare with a Building Society investment.

wisely left the gilts market yesterday, as prices struggled to hang on to the early jobbers' mark-up of 75 points. The Chancellor's strong hint that another cut in base rates was imminent was duly endorsed by the discount houses and the top accepted rate on the weekly Treasury bill tender fell from 9.46593 per cent to 9.04478. This indicates a base rate of 9 ½ per cent under the old formula.

US bonds were more or less mercurial throughout the week and failed to give gilts any particularly strong load. Losses on Tuesday and Wednesday amounted to about one point. all of which and more was recouped on Thursday, as chart buying signals triggered off a rally of 1 % points.

But receding hopes correct or otherwise of a US discount rate cut accord oddly with last week's clutch of economic data, all of which pointed fairly squarely to an accelerating US slowdown.

October producer prices fell by 0.2 per cent, the third successive month of decline. September consumer credit, at $4.3 billion, registered the lowest monthly rise for all 1984. October retail sales were down while industrial production as flat, compared with market hopes of a 1/4 per cent

Plainly bonds are keeping a wary eye on the escalating Federal deficit, which is now, according to some forecasts, well over the $200 billion mark. Nevertheless, an analysis of the performance of US bonds since end-July appears to indicate a substantial improvement in investors inflation expectations. Yields on long dated stocks have fallen from 12.9 per cent to 11.6 per cent As Stephen Lewis of Phillips and Drew points out. real yields have remained remarkably stable at around. 4½ per cent, treating equity yields as a proxy for real

Hence, the decline in the residual yield from 8.4 per cent to 7.1 per cent appears to indicate an improvement in investors' inflation expectations of one percentage point, treating the bond risk premium

Composites

To casual observers the composite insurance sector might seem puzzling. The three composites with the highest US exposure - Commercial Union, General Accident and Royal all announced ghastly third quarter figures this week. And yet their share prices have only been rising.

market just before the results. CU's relative was down by as much as 11 per cent. But by vesterday CU was level pegging the market with its share price unruffled by its £30m nine month pretax loss. Royal's price leapt up over 30p in the three days after revealing its figures to 520p, giving a market relative up at about 7 per cent.

The sector's substantial gains are clear evidence that, in contrast to three or four months ago, market sentiment has changed. It now regards composites as a recovery

There has been increasingly strong evidence that insurance premium rates are at last hardening substantially, particularly in crucial US commercial lines. Moreover, the companies most heavily involved in the disastrous US market have started to show real determination in restructuring their business there.

Indicators

Shares look set for a further surge, but the British Telecom flotation might actually signal the temporary peak of the present bull market, according to a chartist-with-a-difference Mr Richard Marshall, of the broking firm of Montagu Loebl who monitors UK stocks via the FTA Actuaries list.

Calling his technique the Coxswain Timing Indicator, Mr Marshall watches all 35 sectors to check when particular components have reached the top or bottom of their rotation cycle.

Since the 35 sub-sectors of the FTA Acturaries list are part of a whole, they can never actually cease to exist, through liquidation for example. Hence, one sector must perform better than another in any given bull/bear market,

But sectors can remain out of favour for weeks before reaching a turning point. Alternatively, trends can reach a climax with a sudden burst of buying enthusiasm. To pick up these chcrished moments, the Coxswain also has a momentum. which defines when greed or fear is uppermost.

The two indicators work in tandem. Sector analysis defines the worst or best performers, and the momentum indicator shows when the turning point is

The mechanical structure of the Coxswain helps to identify the strength of any signal Hence in the present quarterly market review, food retailing and food manufacturing are approaching a sellin zone, while metals and metal forming may be a buy. But the timing is still

THE STATE OF THE CASE

Last Monday, Sir Keith Joseph made it clear that a large number of parents are going to have to contribute a lot more to their children's further education.

Whatever the rights and wrongs of it assets in excess of £1,700 million. all, the net effect is that some parents will have to pay up to £2400 a year for maintenance, plus tuition fees of around £520. Adding up to a total of nearly £9000 for a three year degree course.

Not everyone, of course, will find themselves in this unfortunate position but, nevertheless, it underlines the necessity to lighten the load and avoid having to find such large sums from immediate income.

READ ON. IT COULD BE QUITE AN EDUCATION.

If one or more of your children is under the age of fifteen, we can offer you a choice of carefully tailored investment plans that will help you meet the cost of further education.

The 41st Annual General Meeting of BPM Holdings pic overmber 18, 1984 in Sirmingham
The fellowing are extracts from the statement by the chairman, Mr. R. P. R. Hillies
The results for the year as a whole show a welcome improvement over the 1982.

In brief, the newspaper publishing side of the Group contributed £2.5m towards the profit, the newspaper's shops £1.6m and our other activities £0.4m; from which £1.6m has to be deducted for the losses of our greetings card chain and retailing's share of

In brief, the newspaper publishing side of the Group contributed £2.3m towards the profil, the newspapens' shope £1.6m and our other activities £0.4m; from which £1.6m has to be deducted for the losses of our greetings card chain and retailing's share of group finance costs.

In February this year your Board declared an interim dividend of 1.5%, an increase of 18.6%, reflecting both the better results and the objective of continuing to reduce the disparity between the interim and final dividends. In like with this and our other objective of trying to maintain even growth the Board now feels able to recommend a final dividend of 11.3% which means that the dividends for the year as a whole will be 25.0% compared with 23.1% last year.

At the end of June, as a result of our holding of Press Association shares, we received 1.583.2% Ordinary 'B' shares in Reuters Holdings PLC We sold just under 20% of our holding at the time of the Reuter's flotzlion, raising £2.7m before tax.

The year under review has seen a significant improvement in the fortunes of our newspapers published from Cohnore Circus, which together produced a profit of £1.94.00.0 We have also seen encouraging results both from our London weeklies published by Lendon and Westminster Newspapers Limited, and from the Barten Dality Mail Limited.

Unhapply, the fortunes of the West Midiands Press Limited, and from the Barten Dality Mail Limited.

Unhapply, the fortunes of the West Midiands Press Limited, and from the Barten Dality Mail Limited.

This was a and difficult task. Sed because it meant the voluntary redundancy of just under one hundred employees, and difficult because those who did transfer had to be retrained to adapt to the Birmingham Post & Mail's working practices whilst at the same time ensuring that tone of the Utles missed an edition.

Recognising pressures placed upon the Colmore Circus workforce both at present and anticipated in the future, The Birmingham Post & Bail Limited placed a £2.2m order for a sophisticated computer system for t with profits before tax of £372,000 from its 43 branches.

The results from Supercards Limited, a loss before tax of £322,000, coming after the major losses last year must seem very disappointing. The poor results were due in part to continued difficulties in realising old stocks but the new management team has brought operations under tighter control. The loss was increased by the decision to provide for the costs of disposing of loss-making branches.

The Groups involvement in the paper and packaging industry is now through two related company interests. Chapman instatries pic and Arthur Weellacott Limited. Our former subsidiary company. West Midlands Earlelopes Limited, was sold to Chapman in August, 1963, and our equity stake in that company was increased from the original 15% acquired in consideration to 20% in January 1964. Chapman's year ended on 31st March, 1984, and their total pre-tax profits increased from £625,000 to £525,000.

As compared with the similar period a year before, Arthur Woollacott's profits accessed by almost 50%, largely as a result of higher investment profits and income. Again I should like to place on record my grateful thanks to all members of staff the have contributed towards our further progress on the road to recovery and better looking for capital growth? This is a more difficult decision. If you do décide to invest ignore the vouchers and go for the bonus shares, you must apply for the bonus offer at the launch as the bonus incentive, like the telephone voucher is not tranferable to subsequent holders of shares - only those who apply at the launch will be cligible. British Telecom is unlikely to be a get rich quick situation since all the incentives are designed to make people hang on to their shares. Logically, the price of the shares ought to fall the market because buyers in the market will not be entitled to the telephone vouchers or bonus issue of shares. However, although the institutions will not be eligible for the incentives, the shares will appeal in the short term because they are only partly paid. This

The $64,000 question is what will the bonus shares be worth three years down the line? Looking at British Telecom's profit potential, two opposing factors have to be

BT will continue to enjoy a virtual monopoly for some years to come though in theory the market is now wide open Its ability to exploit this situation is a definite plus

On the minus side, British Telecom is subject to pricing constraints on about 60 per cent of its business, which will put the brakes on profit potential.

Whatever the investor looking for capital gains decides. remember if you apply for more than £5.200 worth of shares, you are again diluting the capital gains potential.

But one category of investor really should not miss the opportunity to invest - British Telecom employees. The terms of their offer are very generous Under the free offer, each employee of British Telecom who joins the British Telecom Share Ownership Scheme by November 28 (closing date for applications) will be given 54

the Matching Offer - 77, worth £100.10 - must be paid for in full at the time of application.

More shares, up to a maximum of 1,600, can be purchased at a 10 per cent discount on the 130p offer price, so BT employees will be paying only 117p per share.

For them, this really is an offer they cannot afford to

The benefits are the offer of either a share bonus (one free share for every 10 held) if you hold on for three years, or vouchers to help pay the phone bill. Remember, only one person per household can apply for vouchers. You cannot buy any number of shares you like it has to be in set steps linked to the voucher scheme. So the minimum investment is 200 shares, (or £260) and if you want more you must buy 400, 800, 1,200 and so on as described in the prospec-

It may be a few weeks before you receive your formal certificate (proving that you own the shares) from BT, but, in the meantime, the allotment letter serves the same purpose if, for example, you want to sell them.

But there are several factors to bear in mind. On many popular issues people tend to apply for far more shares than they actually want on the assumption that they will not get all they ask for. It will probably be unnecessary to do that with BT. Because the Government is to get individuals to buy the shares, all private investors are likely to get their full allocations. So it will be the institutions who find their allocations cut down if

New pension plan

Nearly 12 million people are self employed or in non-pensionable jobs and the majority of them have made little or no provision for their retirement.

Hoping to persuade at least some of these that they should put some money into a pension scheme, Sun Life has aunched a Flexible Pension Plan which can be linked to any of 15 Sun Life unitised funds.

As its name suggests, the scheme is lexible, but as with all these plans, it is rexible, but as with all these plans, it is the performance of the investments that is of most importance. On this front, Sun Life has been running a number of unitised life funds, most of which have performed ad-equately over the past five years. But none have really sparkled. Details from: Sun Life, 107 Cheapside, London EC2V 6DU.

Mortgage rate cuts

Their has been a spate of mortgage rate reductions after tast week's announcement of the need for a cut by the Building Societies Association. The most drastic move came from the Nationwide which not only cut its basic rate by one point to 11.75 per cent, but scrapped all its differential rates on bigger loans. This makes it, with the Woolwhich which also charges 11,75 per cent on all loans, the cheapest of the large societies, especially for higher mortgages.

The Bristol & West and the Cheltenham & Gloucester also cut their basic rates to 11.75 per cent but kept their differentials intact, charging 12.75 on larger loans. The Alliance cut its basic rate to 12 per cent and now charges up to 13 per cent on higher mortgages. The Angla's basic rate fell to 11.875 per cent, putting it on a par with the Halifax and Abbew National Abbey National.

Several banks also cut their rates. The TSB's rate fell from 13 to 12 per cent (giving a real annual rate of 12.8). The National Westminster's fell further to 11.75 (annual real rate of 12.7). Midland reduced its rate to 12.5 per cent (annual real rate of 13.1 per cent) but Barclays remained unchanged and is now the highest at 13 per cent.

Most at 15 per cent.
Most of the new rates come into effect

Saturday banking

National Westminster is following the long-standing example of Barclays by introducing Saturday opening in 32 of its branches from next May. The bank plans orancies from next may. The bank plans to open 200 branches on Saturdays by the end of 1985. The first group will open between 9.30am and 12.30pm. All are in shopping areas and will offer a range of financial services, including giving advice and arranging personal loans, mortgages and new accounts. and new accounts.

Surprisingly, perhaps, few of the branches are in London, but they are spread widely in such places as Cardiff, Doncaster, Exeter, Halifax, Bolton, St Albans, and Salisbury.

INTERNATIONAL GROWTH PORTFOLIO

special offer from TSB

L'ACED with today's investment decisions, it's becoming harder than ever to know which is the best place for your money.

Which is why we've introduced the TSB International Growth Portfolio, with a Special Bonus Offer.

Designed for growth on an international scale, with the crucial investment decisions taken for you by experts, the TSB International Growth Portfolio brings together three major unit trusts.

With this Portfolio, 45% of your money will be invested in TSB American Unit Trust which, with the US elections over, now offers exciting prospects for profit.

35% will be invested in TSB Pacific Unit Trust, aclear leader in its field and one with excellent potential at this time. The balance -20% - will be invested in TSB Natural Resources Unit Trust. Launched only last month, this new trust is poised for growth across a broad front as the world's economies move out of recession.

On these counts alone, the TSB International Growth Portfolio looks set to produce greater rewards than you're likely to get elsewhere.

You can; of course, invest in any one or more of these trusts in the proportions you choose, with similar bonuses for total investments of £1,250 or more.

TSB AMERICAN UNIT TRUST: 45% A POST-ELECTION WINNER

Investing in a broad spread of shares, mainly in the USA TSB American Unit Trust aims for long-term capital

Now, with President Reagan firmly installed in the White House for four more years, the American economy looks set for a period of steady and sustained expansion. With healthy profits being reported, and declining interest rates encouraging equity markets, prospects for growth look bright indeed.

THE ESSENTIAL FACTS ABOUT THESE TRUSTS

Managers: TSB Unit Trusts Limited (Members of the Unit Trust Association). Investment Managers: Central Trustee Savings Bank Limited. Trustoes: General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation plc (American and Pacific Unit Trusts), General Accident Executor and Trustee Company Limited (Natural Resources Unit Trust).

Charges: 5% on each initial purchase; thereafter 46% per annum (plus VAT) of each Fund's value, deducted from each Thust's income. The Trust Deeds allow for a maximum charge of 1% per annum in each case, the Managers will give unitholders at least three months' written notice of any change. These charges are included in the offer price(s) of units. Selling Units: Units in any of these trusts can be sold back on any business day at the price ruling on receipt of instructions. Payment will normally be made within 7 days of receipt of a renounced unit certificate.

strongly, and leading blue chip companies are reporting excellent results. Hong Kong also presents an attractive picture, now that the Colony's future has been settled, and investment interest is re-awakening. And in Australia, declining interest rates and stock levels suggest that share prices could move significantly higher.

TSB NATURAL RESOURCES UNIT TRUST: 20% POISED FOR WORLDWIDE RECOVERY

Only a month old, TSB Natural Resources Unit Trust aims to achieve long-term capital growth from a range of investments involved in the world's most vital resources.

Energy stocks, base metals, precious metals, minerals and mining, timber products, palm oil, rubber and tea; these are all raw materials for profit.

Currently we look to an increase in values of precious metals and our strategy will reflect this.

TSB INTERNATIONAL GROWTH PORTFOLIO: AN INVESTMENT OPPORTUNITY NOT TO BE MISSED

Remember, the price of units and the income from them can go down as well as up. And you should regard your investment as being a medium to long-term one.

But, with the world's economic future looking as bright as it does and the promise of growth becoming a reality, an investment in the TSB International Growth Portfolio - in the balanced proportions we've set out here -should, we believe, reward you handsomely.

To make that investment, simply complete the coupon below and return it to us, with your cheque. The minimum International Growth Portfolio investment is £1.250.

Remember you can invest in any of these three trusts individually or in the proportions you choose, by using Section B of the coupon. In this case the minimum investment is £250 per trust.

A BONUS YOU MUST CONSIDER

Given today's special investment circumstances, we are keeping our bonus offer open until December 17th. This means that, if you invest /1,250 or more before that date, you'll qualify for a 1% bonus of free extra units and a 2% bonus if you invest £3,000 or more.

With this bonus, and the underlying strength of our strategy, the choice of the TSB International Growth Portfolio could be the best investment decision you'll make this year.

Should you spend the money on your house - improving it, moving it or buying a second home in the country? The house in which we live is often our single largest and most successful investment. How has it done as far as capital appreciation is concerned over the years?

According to the Halifax Building Society, house prices have increased by 136 per cent over the past seven years so compared with the best performing unit trusts over the same period as shown in the table £1,000 invested in your home would now be worth on average £2,360.

This is better than inflation but clearly nowhere near as good as the best performing unit trust. On the other hand, investing in your own home is pretty much risk free. Although house prices are 8 per cent up this year, Mr Roy Gravestock, of the Halifax, says a lot of the carlier increase in house prices was due to the inflation during

If you are thinking of putting the money into improving your home be careful what you spend it on. According to the Halifax, the most worthwhile additions in financial terms are a garage, which puts 15 to 20 per cent on the value of a semi-detached, or

In the present year the amount of the exemption - the profits you can realize before being taxed – is £5,600 a person for married couples.

So what about investing for capital growth through unit trusts where admittedly there are more risks but also rewards. As can be seen from the table a large proportion of the top 10 unit trust over the last 10 years seem to be international funds and some will have received a hig boost from the strength of the dollar against the pound. Mr Peter Hargreaves, of Hargreaves Lansdowne, who is a unit trust adviser thinks a small unit trust portfolio should be split four ways - 35 per cent Britain, 30 per cent in America and 20 per cent in Japan, leaving 15 per cent for something a bit more speculative like a Hong Kong unit trust

Mr Hargreaves says: "You can get this sort of spread with a relatively small lump sum because the average minimum investment required for unit trusts is (£500 although some require less and others want

But many financial advisers fear a high mortality rate among the companies funded through the scheme. As Mr Hargreaves says: "I don't think any client of mine is going to be impressed by the fact that I saved him £5,000 in tax if he ends up with an investment that has halved in value.'

Some of those prepared to tuck money away and forget about it could put their cash lump sum into a self-employed pension scheme.

If you are self-employed you qualify for tax relief at your highest rate paid, on contri-butions. The Government's decision to make middle and higher income parents pay more towards the living costs - and in some cases the education - of their offspring at university is sending shock waves through the middle classes. Telephone lines at the De-partment of Education and Science have been buzzing this week with complaints from irate parents demanding to know how much more they will have to contribute and where they are going to find the money. Mrs Thatcher and her ministers must be calculating that they can survive such an unpopular measure, coming, as it does, relatively early in the life of this government.

The new package of measures, which involves abolition of the minimum grant of £205 a year, a dramatic steepening in the scales for parental contributions towards living costs, and the introduction of payment for the £520-ayear notional tuition fee, will affect up to a quarter of a million parents. Most are not rich - they are middle income.

It will be small comfort to many that there is to be a ceiling of £4,000 a year for families with more than one offspring at coilege. The new scales affect those earning more than about £14,000 a year, that is those with a residual income of more per cent between 1980 and than £13,000. Opportunities for savers have rarely been better than in today's highly competitive market and finding new ways of attracting deposits from the public is a priority for bankers.

The task is more urgent because of the forthcoming extension of the composite rate tax system to the banks. When this comes into effect next April banks will have to deduct basic rate tax from the interest paid to depositors just like building societies do. Without new and better savings schemes the banks will then be left looking even more uncompetitive on the rates offered investors than they do already. Midland Bank has already introduced a range of new savings or deposit schemes and two further developments this week show how the savings industry is gearing up for composite rate tax. The first is an offshore-based nigh interest cheque account being launched by Britannia Arrow, the fund management group, and Cater Allen, the City bank, through its Jersey operations. The scheme is similar to the high interest cheque account they already offer in this country. The minimum deposit is £2,500 and gross interest is 10 per cent flat (10.47 per cent TAX CHANGES

Banks seek new deals for savers

The Jersey scheme also allows customers to write cheques for less than £250 at a cost of 75p a time and includes a secured loan facility of up to half the value of any Britannia

However, the key difference is that come next April interest on the Jersey account will still be paid gross while the onshore account will pay interest net of tax unless you fill in a form showing you are non-resident in the United Kingdom.

The Jersey account is mainly aimed at expatriates although there may well be interest from British residents who want to delay paying tax on their

Lloyds Bank also announced changes this week to its Cashflow account, a regularly monthly savings scheme which in line with other forms of

APR) and a TSB Visa Trustcard offers a cheque book and can be linked to the account. revolving credit facilities.

With an eye on the forthcoming composite rate system, Lloyds is increasing the interest rate payable from 6 to 8.5 per cent. This will be welcome for savers but those who use the and have their salary paid revolving credit facilities are having to pay for this gener-being set at 20 per cent. Lloyds justifies this by saying the new rate will still be consumer credit, such as credit cards and personal loans which is true enough, But it goes to show that many forms of consumer finance are now extraordinarily expensive in relation to the general level of interest rates and indeed the cost of an overdraft. Also gearing up to meet the new challenge. Citibank is revamping the terms of its Cheque Plus account which is Lloyds is putting credit. There is, however, no charge for writing cheques and interest paid is 9.5 per cent on balances up to £500, 11,25 per cent on balances over £500. Competition is certainly helping to improve the oppor-tunities for savers but life is not so comfortable for borrowers nowadays.

On the trail of the last £1 note

The end of the year sees the end of the £1 note and the beginning of the hunt among banknote collectors to track down the last note issued. Vincent Duggleby, the BBC's financial editor and author of the authoritative English Paper Money which goes into its third edition next Friday, believes that the last run of £1 notes will bear the serial DZ80 - the very last note will probably be DZ80 9999. "That will be a very nice note, but it will probably be kept by the Bank of England". Mr Duggleby said. The last notes have already been printed but the Bank of England is loath to spell out the serial numbers because it does not want to start i treasure hunt.

The clearing banks will have stocked up on new £1 notes in preparation for the Christmas shopping spree which boosts the demand for cash. So the last £1 notes will already have been printed and are probably lying in a bank's vaults.

But the run-of-the-mill Somerset note will never be worth more than £1. Certain rare serial numbers such as ANOI would be worth £3 in mint condition.

∽I thought I'd help you get rid of your old pound notes before the end of December"

The last notes in the previous series of pound notes have been traced as far as HZ62 and one would have to pay around £8 for one in good condition. These notes bear the signature of John Brangwyn Page who was replaced as chief cashier by David Henry Fitzroy Somerset

But there are still some

Pret Che

John Standish Fforde (1966-(970) there were some notes with the serial TM which were used to replace damaged notes on the production line. They are worth around £48 in good condition. Some of these notes have "g" printed on the back by the "Bank of England" block to denote that the note was printed on a Goebel machine. A pair of notes - one with the "g" and one without - in uncirculated condition would be worth £200.

Bank note enthusiasts used to value O'Brien (1955-1962) notes AO2N, AO3N and AO4N with an "r" on the reverse which showed that it was an experimental print run. But publicity about this brought out so many of the notes from amateur note watchers that is now no longer a rarity.

Ironically the demand from bank note collectors for Mr and insurance, tax and in-Duggleby's book made the surance. Mrs Uffland said: "I second edition itself a rarity don't agree with the idea of with copies of the £5.95 book recently changing hands at up to £12 The new edition sells for £7.50 and is available from Stanley Gibbons 399 Strand. # Money message for women

A widow approached an in-surance broker, Mrs Andrea Uffland, at a seminar and asked what she should do with her money. It turned out that she had been left more than £250,000 by her husband. Her bank manager had told her to put it on deposit, or in a building society. But, Mrs Uffland said: "What she needed was specialized advice - on tax. for instance, and the implications of inheritance arrangements for her children, but she simply didn't know where to go. Mrs Uffland, a director of Drummond Moores insurance brokers, is launching a series of Money Workshops for Women, backed by Scottish Widows and Commercial Union. The first is in London on the evening of November 28, costing £5.

The Money Workshop will include speakers on savings, tax flogging special financil products to women. What they really need is somewhere to thrash out thier particular financial problems.

Wallace calls on Ibrox cavalry

By Hugh Taylor

A repeat of the rumbustious attacking play which upset Interna-zionale in the UEFA Cup tie is demanded by Jock Wallace, the manager, when Rangers meet Aberdeen at Ibrox Park today in one of their most important league matches of the season. Whether the redoubtable de-leaders will allow themselves to disintegrate as did the Italians is debatable, for Aberdeen are more accustomed to cavalry charges than were the flabbergasted Latins.

The Rangers manager is none the less adamant that his team must regard the game as a cup tie. A glance at the club's record this season gives the reason. In the league Rangers have been disappointing, and have failed to score a premier division goal at Ibrox since In contrast, displays in cup matches have been vigorous, with matches have been vigorous, with 21 goals scored. "Defeat for us in unthinkable." Wallace says. Such a result would leave them seven points adrift of Aberdeen. Aberdeen have been playing with such assurance that they face their visit to Ibrox with equanimity. They are a better balanced side than their are a better balanced side than their rivals, certainly much sharper in attack and stronger in midfield, and while Rangers in full flight can be an impressive sight, their attacks lack appears the most likely outcome. # England's need to vary the game

By Michael Rowbottom In an accent best described as Antipodean Geordie, Allan Jones, the manager of the New Zealanders who completed a tour of Britain in midweek, had little praise for the tactical state of the English game. He observations could not help but be coloured by the performance of England B, his side's final ponents. While England's senior men thrived at the expense of an inept Tarkish side, their understudies made hard labour of winning 2-0 against a team of part-timers who made hard labour of winning 2-0 against a team of part-timers who were simply competent and well drilled. A 5-0 defeat would have disappointed the New Zealanders, but not really surprised them. After all, they were beaten by that score earlier in their tour at lbrox Park.

"Rangers are a lovely side", said Jones, who took Blyth Spartans to the third round of the FA Cap in 1972 and was appointed to his present position early last year after following an eccentric route via Darlington, Bernunda and Trowbridge. "You never know what they're going to do next. They play the ball around, they dribble, they can vary their game.

"England needed to do that", he added. "They were totally predictable. When you have a team that's worth around £5m on the hoof, and they can't break down a bunch of amatems who play Tuesday and Thursday nights, something's wrong."

I amen sment two years as FA

Thursday nights, something's wrong,"

Jones spent two years as FA regional coach for the Mid-West before emigrating in 1979, and one of his colleagues at the time was Howard Wilkinson, the England B manager, who has adopted the longball game at his club, Sheffield Wednesday.

The tactic — in coachspeak, POMO, the Position of Maximum Conoctunity — sounds line in theory.

POMO, the Position of Maximum Opportunity - sounds fine in theory. Who takes up the Position of Minimum Opportunity? But although it has worked for the likes of Wednesday and Watford, Jones is of the school of thought that trusts it, particularly at international level.

"We must attain the ability to constantly change and alter", he said, often. Not surprisingly, the players who have most impressed him on tour – Davey Cooper, of Rangers, Waddle and Beardsley, of Newcastle. Davemont and Hodge, Nottingham Forest's England B pair—shore su institut for externise. - share an instinct for enterprise. But there is not enough of it around.

As New Zealand's director of coaching, he has profited from his renewed contact with our game. As a Geordie for whom "we" still means England, it gives him cause for devotion to devotion duty, Mo Hammond would have to be considered a prime contender for the November nomination. Hammond is manager of the British bobsleigh team, currently warming up for another winter of high speed descents on the 80 mph bob tracks of Europe. Yet, because Association are currently in financial difficulties, Hammond is baving to find £400 from his own pocket to cover his expenses for attending next week's opening international event of the season for the Veltins Cup, in Winterberg. The BBA do receive a grant from the Sports Council, but it is now

nowhere near enough to cover the cost of staging next month's British championships in Winterberg and and lgis, of entering teams in the Nations Cup, world and European championships, and of generally

Munster forced to adjust as captain misses another party

By David Hands, Rugby Correspondent

There are still one or two cars about the streets of Limerick bearing stickers with the legend Another defeat would dissi-"New Zealand 0, Munster 12". harking back to the most famous win, over Graham Mourie's All Blacks of six years ago. That, together with Munster's proud record of two wins, a draw and two defeats against previous Australian sides, may a fruitful partnership with Slack help to put the eighth Wallabies and reforge the midfield trio on their mettle against Munster at Thomond Park today.

The touring side were forced to adjust their planned back row yesterday when Reynolds, the No 8, still suffering from the effects of a kick in the back against Ulster on Wednesday, withdrew from the team. Tuynman, originally selected as flanker, reverts to his normal position of No 8 and, with Roche still inconvenienced by a bruised hip, Codney plays his second game in four days.

The change is not as significant as that Munster had to make late on Thursday when Finn, their captain and centre, withdrew because of a thigh injury sustained playing in last Saturday's international. This is the second occasion

Ward, who played in the 1976 Munster side which lost 15-13 to John Hipwell's Australians, will be hoping for a role as significant as that he has occupied in three previous provincial games against major touring sides, particularly after Dean's failure as a tactical kicker for Ireland last week.

Among other ploys, it will be surprising if he does not test the defensive qualities of the Australian wings, Hanley, and Ian Williams, aged 21, who makes his first appearance in the senior national side.

RUGBY UNION

The Weish Rugby Union selectors, in announcing the Weish team to play Australia in a week's time, have made five changes, including three new caps, from the team which played against Englands in the concluding game of last season's championship. The three newcomers are Phil Lewis, of Lianelli, who replaces Adrian Hadley on the who replaces Adrian Hadley on the left wing: David Bishop (Ponty-pool), who comes in at scrum half; and Alun Davies (Llanelli), who pate some of the confidence established by two international victories; with Wales looming up on the horizon, that must be avoided. Hawker gets only his second game of the tour at and Alun Davies (Llanelli), who takes over for the suspended Richard Moriarty on the flank.

The other changes see Mark Wyatt, who payed in all four internationals in 1983, return to the side instead of Howell Davies (Bridgend), who had taken over as full back throughout last season. Because of a knee injury to Bleddyn Owen, who occupied the centre position last year, Mark Ring, of Cardiff, wins his second cap after gaining his first against England in 1983.

Nystrom cashes in after two net cords tie up Fibak

From Rex Bellamy, Tennis Correspondent, Antwerp

Nystrom has mixed feelings. At the age of 21, it must be gratifying to be ranked eighth in the world. Moreover, Nystrom won the fattest pay packet of his career, at least £66.000, by beating Wojtek Fibek 6-4, 6-7, 7-5 yesterday in the European Champions' Championship (EEC).

The snag is that three other Swedes are ranked above Nystrom.

As an example of what is going on, two second round matches on Thursday evening were watched by 11.598 customers who paid prices ranging, roughly, from £4 to £27. Pierre Darmon, the tournament director, says that television fees and commercial sponsors account for about 65 per cent of the strength income specification for the event's income, spectators for the rest.
The size and enthusiasm of the crowds has an inspiring effect on the players. The Nystrom-Fibak match was a good expample. Neither gave an inch, both achieved sporadic splendour, each in turn gained flecting advantages based on the finest of margins, with the net cord often shifting the luck in Nystrom's favour.

Nystrom may have been unlucky, however, in the tic-break, in which he led 6-2 (four match points) but lost six consecutive points. The last of those match points looked to be a princer but was called a of those match points rooked to be a service winner but was called a fault. Nystrom never forgot that "In the third set it was difficult to concentrate," he said later, "because I thought I had won the match once.
You have to be lucky to win a match

At the end, though, Nystrom got lucky. Fibak, known as "The Fox", was a break up in all three sets. He tested the nimble and supple Nystom with sliced backhand Nystom with sheed backhand approach shots and volleyed drops. In the third set. Fibak had a match point at 5-4 and played the point perfectly – but was passed by a forehand that flew off the net cord and eluded his waiting racket. Another net cord took Nystrom to a fifth match point. But he needed fifth match point. But he needed a sixth before beating Fibak with a backhand down the line Nystom's next opponent will be Lendl, who beat Smid 6-2, 7-5 Smid's only chance was to get to the forecourt, but his service and volley were not quite adequate for his purpose. Moreover, this was the Lendl we saw at Wembley. # Brand's 67 helps Scots lead world

From Mitchell Platts Rome

The fluctuating fortunes of Gordon Brand jun swung in the right direction for Scotland as the 31st World Cup restarted on the Olgiata course here vesterday. Brand scored an enterprising 67 Brand scored an enterprising 67, gaining the outright lead for the Individual Trophy and, with Torrance taking 69, Scotland moved into the first-round lead with an aggregate of 136, eight under par.

The big question is Brand's consistency rather than ability, since he has won two events on the European tour this season but on European tour this season but on several occasions failed to survive the half-way cut. So Scotland, twice runners-up in the last five years, were relying heavily upon Brand finding top gear, in the knowledge that Torrance is in such astonishing form that he is firmly expected to make a valuable contribution.

Brand struck the right note because, after taking three putts on only his second hole, he responded to the challenge in sparkling style by gathering six birdies with golf of the

Middlesex make it difficult

for themselves

The All-England women counties tournament, being held at Bebington in the Wisral today, will, after all, include representation from all the counties (Peter Tatlow writes). A problem arose when 20 counties applied to play. To avoid undue ground wear, it was decided that because they made, late applications, Sussex, Staffordshire and Warwickshire, Bedfordshire and Warwickshire and Sussex, Staffordshire and Sussex, Stafford Cheshire and South Yorkshire must stand down. They appealed against the decision, however, and another pitch was located down the road at Behington Oval.

The outcome today is very open, with a question mark over the contenders Surrey and Middlesex the holders. Middlesex, bristling with increationals, beat Surrey 7-4 in the Fourth Company is the second contenders. with internationals, beat Surrey 1-4 in the South Counties tournament last weekend but, anxious for the participation of a large number of players, have divided their forces by entering two teams of equal strength. Surrey are weaker this scason and, in any case, are without Sue Wilson, the England player, who is injured.

BRAVE GEORGE can stamp are the other televised races on himself as one of the most progressive young horses in training by winning the H & T Walker Goddess Chase at Ascot this afternoon. Unbeaten in three completed outings over fences, this completed outness over lences, this quick-jumping seven-year-old should find Cybrandian and Door Latch to be his most serious opponents as Dake Of Milan faces a formidable task under top weight.

Formally with Michael Dickin-son, Brave George is now with Peter Haynes at Chichester and was having his first run for his new stable when stamming Gambir by 16 lengths at Newbury. After making most of the running, he had his rivals at full stretch turning into the straight.

Cybrandian has been a model of consistency for the in-form stable of Peter Easterby. He was particularly impressive when heating Run To Me by 30 kenghts at Stratford in October. For a horse who has now won five of his last six races over fences, Cybrandian cannot be considered to be harshly treated with 10st 9lb to carry.

Door Latch was most impressive when accounting for A Kinsman at Sandown. After leaping boldly and quickly, Josh Gifford's six-year-old went clear of last season's San Alliance Chase winner after jumping the second last. However, Door Latch may have been flattered by the extent of his superiority as A Kinsman needs softer going and had looked on the burly side in the Duke Of Milan jumped magnificently on his successful reappearance on this course in October. Nick Gaselee's track specialist adopted his usual bold front-running tectics and had his race won at the third fence from home. Duke Of Milan is reported to have benefited from that reported to have benefited from that race and is sure to make a bold bid despite his big weight. Lean Ar Aghaidh and Charter Party are other talented performers but Brave George and Cybrandian should still dominate the finish.

Last season, Townley Stone won four of his six races over hurdles for John Webber and on his final appearance had finished third to Browne's Gazette in the Waterford Crystal Supreme Novices' Hurdle at Cheltenham. "The Arkle is only a dream for the time being", said Webber, who not only trained yesterday's winner's dam, Dream Yesterday's winner's cam, Dream Isle, but also won point-to-points on Townley Stone's grand-dam, Honey Isle. "We had a bit of trouble with his knees last season and the first thing we want to see now is if he's sound tomorrow morning", the trainer said.

Fulke Walwyn was equally delighted with Hypnotic, who was repeating a recent course victory. "This is a pretty decent borse", the 75-year-old maestro said. "He ran a bit too freely today, as they went no gallop in the early stages. His

Abandoned Warrior all the rage again

Abandoned Warrior, who landed a spectacular gamble from 16-1 to 7-2 in his previous race at Wetherby, was again heavily supported in the Have-A-Care Long Distance Novi-ces' Hurdle at Market Rasen

The four-year-old was backed from 9-4 to 6-4 favourite this time and the money would have been no safer in the bank. Abandoned Warrior made steady headway on the inside throughout the final circuit and came with a perfectlyrimed challenge to take command Planetman stayed on to beat last season's Scottish Grand National winner, Androma, by 10 lengths, in the Limestone Edwards Handicar Chase, However, Robert Earnshaw, rider of Planetman, said he though he would only have been second but for the fall of Grinders, Jimmy Fitzgerald was pleased with Androma's first effort of the

Suffolk County Council v Secretary of State for the Environment and Another

Before Lord Fraser of Tullybelion, Lord Elwyn-Jones, Lord Keith of Kinkel, Lord Bridge of Harwich and Lord Templeman Speeches sold November 15]

. A "retained fireman" who was obliged to be available for fire-lighting duties whenever called on but who actually performed such duties for less than 30 hours a week was not a "whole-time employee" within regulation A3 (1) of the Local Government Supresser Linear Property Supresser Linear Pro Government Superannuation Regulations (SI 1974 No 520) and was accordingly not a pensionable employee under those regulations.

The House of Lords, overruling Bullock v Merseyside County Council ([1979] ICR 79) (Court of Appeal), allowed an appeal by Suffolk County Council direct from Mr Institute Woolf who had unheld a Mr Justice Woolf, who had upheld a determination of the Secretary of State for the Environment in favour of the second respondent, Mr Edward George Noel Alcock.

Regulation A3 (1) of the 1974
Regulations provides: "whole-time employee' means an employee whose contractual minimum hours of employment regularly or usually amount to 30 hours or more in each

Regulation B2 (1) provides: "The following persons shall be entitled to participate in the benefits of the appropriate superannuation fund maintained under these regulations. . . . (b) every whole-time manual worker. . . ".

Mr Anthony Scrivener. QC and Mr Colin Smith for the council: Mr Andrew Collins for the secretary of state; Mr Eldred Tabachnik, QC and Mr Anthony Dinkin for Mr Alcock.

LORD TEMPLEMAN said that a retained fireman was not, like a regular fireman, on duty for a stipulated number of hours. Under his conditions of service, he was obliged to attend at the station to which be was attached for training and maintenance duties for an average of up to two hours each week, to attend promptly in response to a call at any time and to attend at any fire or other occurrence or at any other station for reserve or stand-by duties in accordance with orders. In return, he was entitled to an annual retaining fee and to attendance and turn-out fees and a drill attendance and managed a shop within five minutes of the fire station. If he was called during shop hours, he had to close the shop or leave it in charge of somebody else. A retained fireman who was not self-employed was not accepted for service unless his employers consented to his answering calls and engaging in fire-fighting duties.

Davies v Sumper

Mr Alcock, as a retained fireman. was not entitled to an ordinary retirement pension from the council as a fire authority under the Firemen's Pension Scheme 1973. made under section 26 of the Fire Services Act 1947, but it was submitted that he was entitled to an ordinary retirement pension from the council as a local authority employing him as a retained

Retained firemen accepted onerous restraints on their freedom to move outside the vicinity of their fire stations. They constituted an indispensable and valuable part of the fire service.

Of all the fire stations in England some 62 per cent were manned exclusively by retained firemen; in Scotland the proportion was 70 per cent and in Northern Ireland it was 89 per cent.

Retained firemen performed the same fire-fighting functions as regular firemen. They were subject to the same medical and educational requirements, received the same training, were subject to the same disciplinary code and aspired to the same ranks and status. Retained firemen and regular firemen endured the same dangers and accepted the same risks of injury and death. Firemen, whether regular, retained or volunteer, performed a signal service for the community that they served. Those considerations were very relevant to the negotiation of the terms of service of regular and retained firemen.

But there was one important But there was one important difference between a retained fireman and a regular fireman. Apart from his weekly two hour spell of training, a retained fireman was free to do as he pleased, provided that he remained within call, unless and until a fire occurred and he was called to his station.

Fire-fighting did not occupy a large part of his time. He was free to pursue, and usually did pursue, some other occupation that was his principal occupation. Mr Alcock's principal occupation and means of livelihood were in his shop. The regular fireman, on the other

1. 1981 the defendant turned in his old car, collected the new one, and signed a sales invoice for the former. That showed a mileage of 18,100 miles, but it was stated before the Divisional Court that that was added later. The old car had been

The question was whether the defendant applied the trade descripof calls made on him. He was engaged in that occupation for a stipulated number of hours on terms that prevented him from doing anything else while on duty.

The retained fireman was only on duty when a fire occurred and he was called. The regular fireman was on duty for his contractual hours and overtime hours each week whether there was a fire or not. So far as pensions were concerned, the regular fireman must look to his principal occupation as a fireman to provide for his retire-ment. The retained fireman could look to his principal occupation. Lordship's opinion retained fireman was a part-time and not a full-time employee. Without the aid of a definition. Mr Alcock appeared to be a full-time shopkeeper and a part-time fireman. He was a shopkeeper every weekday. He was a fireman when there was a fire and when he was called on to report and work as a

The expressions "full-time" and part-time" must be related to the time spent or required to be spent in "whole-time employee" in the 1974 Regulations supported the normal meaning.
A retained fireman contracted to answer a call but his obligation to keep himself available to respond to a call was not in itself employment. He contracted to employ himself in the service of the council whenever fire. Once the call came, his hours of ne was released.

It was absurd to suggest that Mr It was absurd to suggest that Mr Alcock's "hours of employment" by the council included the hours he spent working for himself in his shop and the other hours during which he engaged in activities that the council could not control and in places where it had no authority.
While his Lordship could under stand and sympathise with the view that a retained fireman ought to be put in the same position for redundancy purposes as a regular fireman, the decision in Bullock's case, where a retained fireman had successfully claimed a redundancy payment under the Contracts of Employment Act 1972, seemed to him to be based on a misunder-standing of the differences between a regular fireman who was on duty and a retained fireman who was on call. He would overtule that decision. The present appeal must be allowed.

Weekend cuts sentence

Westcott v Westcott

A judge had no power to lengthen the term of a sentence of committal to prison for contempt of court after learning that the effect of the original sentence would be shorter than he had anticipated.

The Court of Appeal on November 16 allowed an appeal by Mr Arthur James Westcott, against an order of Judge Wilkock, QC, at Yeavil County Court on November 15 purporting to substitute a term of nine days for seven days committal to prison for contempt.

LORD JUSTICE STEPHEN BROWN, with whom Lord Justice Parker agreed, said that on Wednesday, November 14 the judge had ordered that Mr Westcott be committed to Dorchester Prison for seven days for breaking the terms of non-molestation order. Under section 14 of the Contempt of Court Act 1981 a committal to prison for contempt had to be for a fixed term. The judge had discovered that the approval of the Home Office had a policy of releasing prisoners due to be released on a Sunday on the previous Friday. When the judge learned of the practice he disapproved of the effect that it would have in allowing Mr Westcott, with two days of remission, to be released on the Friday after serving only three days

On November 15 the judge summoned the solicitors of both parties to his chambers and after having contact with the prison concluded that the only course which he could take was to after the sentence. So he purported to substitute for a term of seven days a term of nine days' imprisonment. Fundamentally what the judge did was to pass a different sentence of nine instead of seven days' imprisonment. He had no power to do that. The consequences of his original sentence were for the Home Office and the prison authorities. The appeal should be allowed and a declaration made that the order on November 15 was one that the judge had no power to make.

Women priests 'obstacle' to unity

By Clifford Longley Religious Affairs Correspondent

The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Liverpool, Mgr Derek Worlock, said yesterday that the decision of the General Synod of the Church of England in favour of the ordination of women on Thursday was an "obstacle" to unity between the

He is vice-president of the Roman Catholic Bishops' Con-ference of England and Wales. and was speaking at the end of their meeting in London, when the progress of Anglican-Roman Catholic negotiations had been generally discussed. He said he understood "why, if individuals feel that this is an approach to truth, they should pursue the matter

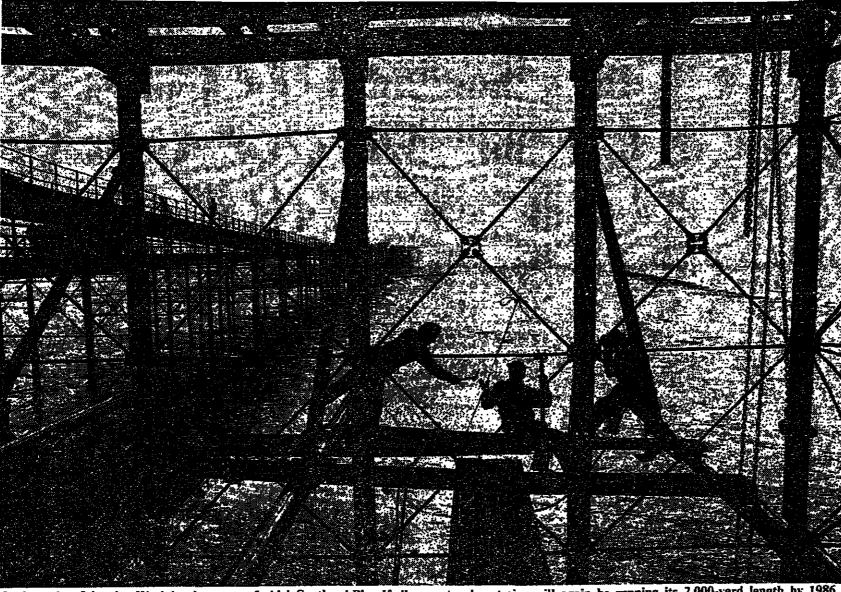

The bishops had not discussed the issue at their meeting, which was taken to be an indication that relations between the two churches have not been greatly disturbed.

It emerged yesterday that the Roman Catholic Church has implemented its earlier decision look favourably on the possibility of ordaining to the Roman Catholic priesthood married clergy of other churches who converted to Roman Catholicism. Several cases are believed to be in the "pipeline" but no decision has been made in any individual case.

Some Anglican clergy may leave the Church of England if ordains women, and the policy on convert married clergy would give them an option to continue in the Roman Catholic Church.

A set of "guidelines" have been agreed by the bishops, who are concerned not to be seen to be "poaching" from the Church of England. An Anglican clergyman who becomes a Roman Catholic would be expected to wait at least a year before his case could be considered. Mgr Worlock said in most cases the Roman Catholic Church would consult the appropriate authority in the Church of England when considering their suit-

It is understood the guidelines have been discussed with the Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr Robert Runcie, who has registered no objection.

There had been speculation that the authorities would not stage the conference because of the risk that awkward questions might be raised about Stalinism and Svetlana's descriptions of the Soviet Union as a prison full of pain and trauma. But only a handful of questions were permitted after her prepared statement.

Occasionally correcting the official translation, Svetlana said she had never meant to defect in 1967. She had intended to return from Delhi, where she attended her husband's funeral, within a month. Planting of trees and shrubs is best done as soon as possible. If evergreens are to be planted have some thin plastic sheeting and canes available to put round them to protect from bitter drying winds. Or take a tip from garden contractors when they plant evergreens in the autumn: spray them with an anti-desiccant such as Spray'N Save (S600) - the spray we use to prevent needle drop of Christmas trees and shrivelling of evergreens used as decorations. Punch out the growing tip of autumn sown sweet peas encourage side shoots.

Put cloches over Christmas ro to hasten flowering and to protect the blooms. Lift and pot up primroses or polyanthuses and bring them into flower early in a cold greenhouse or frame. Watch for signs of slugs and either scatter slug pellets or water on aliquid slug killer. They are very fond of the buds of Iris unguicularis (I. stylosa) which are now appearing.

Divide three year old plants of globe artichokes and plant a new row with the young shoots.
